This is a digital copy of a book that was preserved for generations on library shelves before it was carefully scanned by Google as part of a project to make the world's books discoverable online.

It has survived long enough for the copyright to expire and the book to enter the public domain. A public domain book is one that was never subject to copyright or whose legal copyright term has expired. Whether a book is in the public domain may vary country to country. Public domain books are our gateways to the past, representing a wealth of history, culture and knowledge that's often difficult to discover.

Marks, notations and other marginalia present in the original volume will appear in this file - a reminder of this book's long journey from the publisher to a library and finally to you.

Usage guidelines

Google is proud to partner with libraries to digitize public domain materials and make them widely accessible. Public domain books belong to the public and we are merely their custodians. Nevertheless, this work is expensive, so in order to keep providing this resource, we have taken steps to prevent abuse by commercial parties, including placing technical restrictions on automated querying.

We also ask that you:

+ Make non-commercial use of the files We designed Google Book Search for use by individuals, and we request that you use these files for personal, non-commercial purposes.

+ Refrain from automated querying Do not send automated queries of any sort to Google's system: If you are conducting research on machine translation, optical character recognition or other areas where access to a large amount of text is helpful, please contact us. We encourage the use of public domain materials for these purposes and may be able to help.

+ Maintain attribution The Google "watermark" you see on each file is essential for informing people about this project and helping them find additional materials through Google Book Search. Please do not remove it.

+ Keep it legal Whatever your use, remember that you are responsible for ensuring that what you are doing is legal. Do not assume that just because we believe a book is in the public domain for users in the United States, that the work is also in the public domain for users in other countries. Whether a book is still in copyright varies from country to country, and we can't offer guidance on whether any specific use of any specific book is allowed. Please do not assume that a book's appearance in Google Book Search means it can be used in any manner anywhere in the world. Copyright infringement liability can be quite severe.

PREFACE

THIS little volume is an attempt to meet a difficulty which is often felt by young students of Roman poetry, —the want of a convenient handbook, containing a sufficiently representative selection from the fragments which have been preserved of the epic, dramatic, and satiric poets of Rome, from the earliest times of the Republic to the Augustan age.

From the Comedies of Plautus and Terence we can learn all that we require of the Fabulae Palliatae, as exhibited on the stage. But to form any idea of Roman Tragedy, or of the peculiarly national Praetextae and Togatae (or Tabernariae), we must make the best use we can of the remains of Pacuvius and Accius, of Atta, Titinius, and Afranius. Nor shall we appreciate the growth of the Epic, which culminates in Virgil, nor of the Satire as presented to us by Horace and Juvenal, without some study of the fragments of Livius, Naevius, and Ennius, of Lucilius and Varro.

But this implies access to a good many books, which are not always easily procurable; and, even then, unless we have some clue to their connection, the scattered fragments are often unintelligible. The object of this volume is to supply such a clue. No doubt there is a constant danger of suggesting a fanciful explanation; and the endeavour to work isolated lines into the plot of a play or the subject of a satire may be, here and there, nothing better than a piece of misplaced ingenuity. But so much has been done for the interpretation of Ennius by Vahlen and L. Müller, and for the remains of Roman Tragedy and Comedy by O. Ribbeck, that, with such experienced guides, one may hope to have gone not very far astray. Besides the collections of fragments edited by Ribbeck (which are indispensable to every student of the Roman drama), there are two other books by the same scholar—Die römische Tragödie, and Geschichte der römischen Dichtung—which are very helpful. For the Saturae of Lucilius, the notes in Wordsworth's Fragments and Specimens of Early Latin are most valuable, as far as they go. The Saturae Menippeae of Varro have been adapted from Riese's edition, with some aid from Bücheler. For the remains of other poets, constant use has been made of E. Bährens' Fragmenta Poetarum Romanorum. But no attempt has been made in the present volume to present a critical text, or to settle questions of metrical arrangement. The editor has endeavoured to avail himself of the best sources; and he will be amply satisfied if he shall have succeeded in making the study of these Fragments more easy and more interesting.

FRAGMENTA SELECTA.

AXAMENTA,

OR

CHANTS USED IN RITUAL.

CARMEN SALIARE.

These fragments may, perhaps, be arranged into rude Saturnians; but the language is hardly intelligible, in spite of ingenious conjectures. In Horace's time (Ep. 2. 1. 85) the 'Saliare carmen Numae' was a puzzle; and Quintilian (Inst. Or. 1. 6. 40), acknowledges that the priests themselves did not understand the words.

I.

Dívum em pa cánte, divúm deo supplicáte.

[Varro, L. L., 7. 26, 27.]

By em pa Havet understands eum patrem. Others read empta for which Bergk proposes templa and Bährens parentem; cante = canite; divum deo, i. e. Ianus (Macrob. Sat. 1. 9).

II.

In Terent. Scaur. (2661 P.) two lines of a Salian hymn are given thus:

Cume ponas Leucesiae praetexere monti quot ibet etinei (? eunei) de is cum tonarem.

This is unintelligible. Bergk ingeniously refers the end of the first line, praetexere monti, to a gloss in Festus (p. 205) prae tet tremonti = praetremunt te. The lines may, perhaps, with a few slight alterations be printed

Cume tonas Leucetie prae tet tremonti
Quot ibi te viri audeïsunt tonare.

Cume = cum; Leucetie = lord of light (Macrob. Sat. I. 15); audeïsunt = audierunt. Bergk daringly gives the second line as 'quom tibi cunei decstumum tonaront,' 'when thy bolts thunder on the right.'

CARMEN FRATRUM ARVALIUM.

An inscription from the Acts of the Arval Brotherhood, found in Rome in A. D. 1778. The actual copy of the old Latin, more or less correct, apparently belongs to the time of Elagabalus.

1. Enós Lasés iuváte (ter)
Neve lúe rúe Mármar sins incúrrere in pléores (ter).
Satúr fu fére Mars limén salí sta bérber (ter)
Semúnis álterneí ádvocápit cónctos (ter).
5. Enós Marmór iuváto (ter)
Triúmpe (quinquies).

l. 1. enos = nos; with the form cp. E-castor; Lases = Lares. l. 2. lue = luem; rue = ruem, i. e. ruinam; sins = sines, 'thou must not suffer'; as advocapit (l. 4) = advocabitis. l. 3. fu = esto, 'be satiate, fierce Mars!' limen sali = 'leap over, or cross (thy temple's) threshold'; sta berber (verbera?) 'stop thy scourging'; or (addressed to each dancing priest) 'leap on the threshold! halt! smite (the ground).' l. 4. semunis (se-homo, homōnes) = 'superhuman powers.'

The form of the chant printed here, as adopted by Mommsen, may be taken as giving its general sense and character. But it is impossible to recover the original words with any certainty. The inscription itself is defaced, and carelessly cut, the spelling of the same words varying in different lines.

In the second line Havet would read 'ne veluere (= volueris) Marmars incurrere,' taking sins as a mistaken product of the final s of Marmars, and the initial syllable of incurrere. For limen sali he prints nive (= neve) ensalli (= insili), i. e. 'and leap not upon us.'

VATICINIA, ETC.

INCERTI AUCTORIS VATICINIUM.

During the siege of Veii (B. C. 395), commissioners came from Delphi 'sortem oraculi adferentes congruentem responso captivi vatis' (Liv. 5. 16). The utterance of the oracle, as given in Livy, may possibly be arranged, with some alteration, in Saturnian measure, which Bährens thus gives; referring the legend about the prophecy to the age of Naevius and Livius Andronicus:

Románe, aquám Albánam | cáve lacú tenéri,
cave ín maré manáre | flúminé sinás suo.
emíssa agrós rigábis | dissipátam rívis
exstíngues: túm tu insíste | aúdax hóstium múris.
memór quam pér tot ánnos | óbsidés úrbem,
ex eá tibí his fátis | núnc datám victóriam,
duéllo perfécto dónum | pórtato ámplum víctor
ad meá templá, sacráque | pátria quórum cúra est
omíssa, ut adsolet, | endóstauráta fácito.

APPII CLAUDI SENTENTIAE.

Appius Claudius Caecus, censor B. C. 312, consul 307, 296, was the 'great patrician . . . with whom begins the first attempt at Latin prose-composition and at art-poetry,' Teuffel, R. L., § 90.

I.

[Festus, stuprum pro turpitudine.]

II.

Amícum cúm vidés | oblísceré[2] misérias,
inimícis si es comméntus, | néc libéns aéque.

[Priscian, s.v. commentus = σεσοφισμένος, i. e. 'if deceived by foes.']

[1] Bährens suggests that the gap may be thus filled up [?] Iudicis ae|qui, 'it belongs to a just judge.'

[2] oblíscere, Fleckeisen. oblíviscere, codd.

III.

Est únus quísque fáber | ipse suaé fortúnae.

[Pseudo Sallust, De Ord. Rep. 1. 1. 2.]

MARCII VATIS PRAECEPTA.

'Marcius the prophet' lived some time before the second Punic War (Cic. De Div. 1. 50. 115; Liv. 25. 12, &c.).

I.

Postrémus dícas, prímus | táceas ⏑–⏑–⏒.

[Isidor. 6. 8. 12.]

II.

TRAGOEDIAE.

ACHILLES.

THE words in this fragment may be supposed to be uttered by Achilles, after the offer of reparation described in Hom. Il. 9.

Sí malos imitábo, tum tu prétium pro noxá dabis.
[NONIUS, s. v. pretium : imitat.]

AEGISTHUS.

THE play opens with the preparations of the Greek host for their return from Troy (I). On the smooth seas of their homeward voyage, they watch the dolphins playing round the ships (II); and a chorus of thanksgiving is raised to the gods (III).

Agamemnon is seen taking his seat at the banquet (IV); and then being stabbed and falling to the ground (V). Electra speaks bitterly to her mother over her father's corpse (VI); and Aegisthus orders her (or, perhaps, Cassandra) to be dragged away from the altar at which she had taken refuge (VII).

I.

THE lament of Teucer over man's ingratitude.

EQUUS TROIANUS.

THIS play probably follows the same lines as the Sinon of Sophocles. The scene may be the appearance of Cassandra, firebrand and axe in hand, to destroy the Wooden Horse, while she prays Apollo that her prophetic words may find credence.

AESIONA.

AESIONA (better known to us in the Greek form, Hesione), the daughter of Laomedon, was rescued from a sea-monster by Hercules and Telamon, who were to claim the maiden on their return from Colchis.

But Laomedon, with his usual bad faith, broke his promise, and this fragment may contain the threat of Hercules or Telamon, that the father shall be chastened not with mere words (lingua), but with the sword-blade (lingula).

Né mihi gerere mórem videar língua verum língula.

DANAE.

ACRISIUS immures his daughter Danaë in a brazen tower, but Iupiter finds means to enter the stronghold. He may be supposed to be speaking confidentially to Mercury, before the maiden is imprisoned (I), extolling her beauty, and acknowledging the mastery of Love (II). Acrisius accuses Danaë, and all other women, of incontinence (III, IV); and justifies her punishment (V). Danaë is banished from her home by her angry father (VI); and all that 'shower of gold' has profited her nothing (VII). In her distress she prays Iupiter to give her a sign from heaven (VIII); and her prayer is granted (IX).

HECTOR PROFICISCENS.

The main subject of this play was the setting out of Hector to battle. Proud of his father's praise (I), he designs to burn the Greek fleet, and leave not one man alive (II). See Hom. Il. 8. 132, 173; 12. 73.

IPHIGENIA.

This fragment is apparently taken from an Iphigenia in Tauris. The prayer, 'that the North Wind may spread his wings and waft me home,' may be uttered by Orestes or by his sister, or by one of her home-sick maidens, weary of their life in Scythia.

Pásso velo vícinum, Aquilo, méd in portum fér foras.

[Nonius, s. v. passum = extensum.]

LYCURGUS.

We are told by Sophocles (Antig. 955 foll.) how Lycurgus, son of Dryas, the haughty king of the Edoni, sought to stop the revels of the Bacchanals; and how Dionysus punished him for his insolence. The play of Naevius follows the general outline of the Bacchae of Euripides; and the fate of Lycurgus corresponds with that of Pentheus, as there described. The king's watchmen report the appearance of the Wine-god's Maenads, trampling down the crops, and chanting wild songs (I–III). He orders his guards to draw them into the deep forest; to trap them there like birds in a snare, and to put them to death (IV–VI). But they suspect the king's intention: 'he means to hunt them down, and to conduct the revellers from his groves, with savage vengeance as their guerdon' (VII). But the king's behest shall not stop them! (VIII). Then the guards bring the Wine-god before the king, who questions them as to the capture (IX). He threatens his prisoner; but is warned not to try conclusions with him (X, XI). Lycurgus and Liber proceed to altercation (XII, XIII); meanwhile the guards return and report in amaze the sportive fearlessness of the Bacchae (XIV–XVI). Then Liber calls down fire from heaven, and all the king's palace bursts into flame, brilliant as a flower (XVII, XVIII); while a loud voice is heard, summoning Lycurgus forth (XIX).

PRAETEXTAE.

ALIMONIUM REMI ET ROMULI, SIVE ROMULUS, SIVE LUPUS.

THE title of the play is uncertain and the scanty remains leave the subject hopelessly obscure. Perhaps the Veientine king Viba visits Amulius, but is coldly received. He is questioned, somewhat contemptuously, as to the troubles in the state of Veii (I, II).

I.

II.

CLASTIDIUM.

This play recounts the victory of Marcellus over the Gallic chieftain, Virdumarus, whom he attacked while besieging the Roman dependency, Clastidium, and stripped him of the 'spolia opima.'

Vita ínsepulta laétus ín patriám redux.

[Varro, L. L. 9. 78.]

The Clastidium may have been acted on the occasion of Marcellus' triumph, or at the funeral games after his death; or, perhaps when Claud. Marcellus dedicated the temple to Virtus, which his father had vowed seventeen years before.

NAEVII ET METELLORUM ALTERCATIO.

Naevius maintained that the consulships of the Metelli had fallen to them by luck, and not by merit; with a possible further meaning of 'to our misfortune.'

'Antiquum Naevii est:

Fató Metélli Rómae cónsulés fíunt.

Cui tunc, Metellus consul iratus versu responderat senario hypercatalecto, qui et Saturnius dicitur:

Dabúnt malúm Metélli Naévio poétae.'

[PSEUDASCON. in Cic. Verr. Act. I. 10.]

There is a particular force in the word malum, which has a special reference to a flogging, such as might be administered to slaves. Cp. PLAUT. Rudens, 4. 4. 81; TERENT. Adelph. 4. 45; LIVY, 4. 49, 50.

PALLIATAE.

ARIOLUS.

ACCORDING to Aul. Gellius (3. 3.), the 'Ariolus' and 'Leo' were the titles of two plays written by Naevius while in the prison, to which he had been brought by his superbia Campana. He is said by means of these plays to have made the amende honorable to the powerful personages whom he had offended; and so 'a tribunis plebis exemptus est.' But if the first fragment has any meaning to us, it would seem that the 'hungry lion, in whose jaws you would put the curb—at your peril,' was none other than Naevius himself, in anything but a submissive mood. The second fragment contains a joke at the favourite viands of some of the Italian towns—a stew of the inside of a sow after farrowing, for the Lanuvini; and 'Praenestinae nuces' (Cato, R. R. 8), for the guests from Praeneste.

'suópte utrosque décuit acceptós cibo;

COLAX.

In the prologue to the Eunuchus, Terence alludes to the Colax of Naevius and of Plautus, as introducing the characters of the parasite and the swashbuckler. But Menander was the original inventor of these characters; and it is from Menander, and not from his own Latin predecessors, that Terence has borrowed them, as he warmly insists.

We have here the parasite and the swashbuckler on the stage together. The soldier in his conceit claims to be Hercules, and demands his usual tithe: the parasite jokingly retorts that he has practically given it already, as he has appropriated to his own use the dainties provided for someone else's table; and this may be looked upon as the public feast which was regularly offered to Hercules as his tithe.

Qui décumas partis? quántum mi alieni fuit pollúxi tibi iam públicando epulo Hérculis decumás.

[Priscian, s. v. pollucere.]

TARENTILLA.

In the play of the 'Girl of Tarentum' we have a prologue, the single remnant of which is thus interpreted by Mommsen (H. R., B. 3, cap. 14): 'the position of the poet under the sceptre of the Lagidae and Seleucidae is enviable as compared with his position in free Rome' (I). The plot describes the adventures of two young men who are paying a visit to Tarentum, where they are feasting (II), and flirting, with at least one very facile damsel (III). Suddenly their fathers appear on the scene (IV). The young men pay them the best welcome they can (V); but they meet with a rude rebuff (VI), and a stern lecture; after which they are straightway sent home (VII).

TUNICULARIA.

IT is not easy to understand the picture here given, but it would seem that Theodotus, who is engaged on some trumpery decoration for the altars at the Compitalia—a sketch of the Lares dancing, roughly washed in with a 'bull's-tail' for a brush—is so profoundly impressed with the importance of his work that he shuts himself up in his studio, and keeps out the prying public by a screen of mats. The reading 'oppeilans . . . aras' = 'blocking up the altars,' is a conject. of Bücheler. The MSS. give 'compellas,' for which Ribbeck substitutes 'compiles' = 'you may pilfer from.'

ALCUMAEO.

Alcmaeon, after murdering his mother Eriphyle, for her treachery to her husband Amphiaraus, is pursued from land to land by the Furies, till he reaches the city of Psophis in Arcadia, where he finds purification at the hands of Phegeus the king. He marries the king's daughter Arsinoë; and here he is represented as appealing to her in his terror at the avenging deities (I, II).

ALEXANDER.

Hecuba, wife of Priam, having dreamed that she had brought forth a firebrand, her husband ordered that the son she bore should be put to death. But the servants spared his life, and certain shepherds having found him when he was exposed, he was rescued, and brought up under the name of Paris (I); which was afterwards changed to Alexander, because of his prowess in the games (II, III). He is received into the king's palace, and Cassandra, terrified at the sight of him, prophesies the downfall of Troy (IV). She foretells the fatal 'Iudicium Paridis' (V); the death of Hector (VI); and the stratagem of the 'Wooden Horse' (VII).

CRESPHONTES.

Cresphontes, king of Messenia, espoused the cause of the people against the nobles, whose leader, Polyphontes, slew him, together with his two sons, forcibly taking to wife Merope, the widow of the murdered man. Merope's own father Cypselus was among the adherents of Polyphontes. We hear the protest of the nobles against the claims of the burghers (I); the altercation between Cypselus and Merope (II); and her grief at being debarred from paying funeral honours to her sons (III).

HECTORIS LUTRA.

THIS play includes the whole of the action in the Iliad from the sally of Hector to the restoration of his corpse to his father, including the death of Patroclus. Hector comes boldly forth from the walls (I), and in the battle which ensues many are wounded, among them Eurypylus, who comes back to Patroclus, seeking the aid of a physician (II). Patroclus enquires eagerly about the fortune of the day (ib.). Achilles suffers Patroclus to take his place in the field, and the young man commits himself to the protection of heaven (III). News comes of the death of Patroclus, and Achilles steps forth in terrible anxiety from his tent (IV). He calls on each of the Myrmidones to find him armour for the fray, but no one is willing, as he bitterly acknowledges (V). When at last he rushes forth to war, all nature is hushed in awful expectancy (VI), as he drives his fiery steeds (VII), and checks their impetuous speed (VIII). The special scene which gives its name to the play is not preserved; we only have Priam crying on the Myrmidones for pity; and urging his plea for that justice which is better than all gallantry (IX, X).

HECUBA.

HECUBA, after the treacherous murder of her son Polydorus, makes a passionate appeal to heaven (I). When she hears that sentence has gone forth for the immolation of her daughter Polyxena, she entreats Ulysses to use his all-persuasive powers to prevent the sacrifice (II). But she feels that her supplication is all in vain (III). In her misery, she fain would take her own life, or share her daughter's death (IV, V). And, over the corpse of her murdered son, she beseeches Agamemnon to pity her, reminding him of the claim that Cassandra's surrender of herself has upon him (VI.

IPHIGENIA.

AGAMEMNON, in his tent, asks his old servant 'What of the night ?' (I) [Cp. Eur. I. A. 6]. Instead of the Euripidean Chorus of maidens we have a Chorus of Achaean soldiers, fretting at the long delay (II). Then follows the altercation between Agamemnon and Menelaus : the former condemning the flight of Helen, and deprecating the sacrifice of Iphigenia (III, IV). [Cp. Eur. I. A. 328 foll.]. Agamemnon, realising that the sacrifice must proceed, laments the hard law that forbids kings to weep (V). [Cp. Eur. I. A. 446]. Achilles sneers at the pretended prescience of Calchas (VI) [I. A. 956.] Iphigenia accepts her death, and surrenders herself for her country's weal (VII) [I. A. 1375 foll.].

MEDEA EXUL.

Cicero (De Fin. I. 2. 4) quotes the Medea of Ennius as among those 'fabellas Latinas ad verbum e Graecis expressas.' This is certainly overstated.

I.

II.

(The next passage does not express the meaning of the corresponding words in Euripides. There, Medea excuses herself to the Corinthian dames for coming forth from her house; here Ennius seems to represent the Corinthians as taunting Medea with her exile from her country, while she defends herself.)

Quaé Corinthi arcem áltam habetis, mátronae opulentae óptimates!

PHOENIX.

Phoenix was falsely accused of incontinence by Phthia, the concubine of his father Amyntor, who in his anger puts his son's eyes out. Phoenix flies to the court of Peleus, where he recovers his sight through the skill of Chiron, and is made king of the Dolopes. He seems to rebuke the nurse, who tempts him by the revelation of her mistress's passion (I, II); and he confronts his angry father, and proclaims his own innocence (III).

This fragment suggests a lacuna in the Latin after Abydi. The mus is a sort of sea-crayfish. l. 3. pecten = 'scallop'; charadrus?; elops or helops is, perhaps, the 'sturgeon.'

TRAGOEDIAE.

ANTIOPA.

ANTIOPA, daughter of the Boeotian King Nycteus, being with child by Jupiter (I), is driven from her home by her father's threats (II). She finds refuge with Epopeus, King of Sicyon, who marries her. Nycteus on his death-bed commits the duty of punishing Antiopa to his brother Lycus, who slays Epopeus and carries Antiopa into captivity. On her way she bare two sons, whom she is forced to leave exposed on Mount Cithaeron. A herdsman finds them, and brings them up, giving them the names of Amphion and Zethus, the former devoting himself to music and philosophy, the latter to the rough life of herdsman and hunter (III). Antiopa, being cruelly treated in her captivity by Lycus' wife, Dirce, finds means of escape. She comes to the young men's homestead, and tells them the piteous story of her sufferings (IV, V, VI). Amphion is touched by the sight of her misery (VII, inc. fab. VI, Ribb.); but Zethus, thinking her to be a runaway slave, and hating all womankind (VIII, inc. fab. LIV, Ribb.), would not receive her. Meanwhile, a festival in honour of Bacchus is celebrated, and Dirce, accompanied by her train of Maenads with flying hair (IX), comes to the place where Antiopa is seeking refuge. The young men bid them depart (X), but Dirce claims the surrender of her captive, and is about to slay her (XI, inc. fab. IV, Ribb.). But the herdsman having revealed to the brothers that Antiopa is their mother, she joyfully greets them, and they set her free (XII). Dirce is then tied by her hair to a wild bull and dragged about till she is torn to pieces. Lycus would also have been slain, but Hermes saves his life and bids him hand over his kingdom to Amphion.

The highly-wrought description of Antiopa's sorrows is ridiculed by Persius (1. 77): 'Sunt quos Pacuviusque et verrucosa moretur Antiopa aerumnis cor luctificabile fulta,' which last words may be actually borrowed from Pacuvius. A strong point of interest in the play is the contrast between the blunt, practical Zethus and the artistic, contemplative Amphion. This is alluded to in Horace (Ep. 1. 18. 39 foll.), and is worked out elaborately in the Antiope of Euripides. Zethus is characteristic of the old Greek burgher, hating philosophy (XIII, inc. fab. II, Ribb.); Amphion is the Greek 'sophist.' We find him dealing with the necessity of change and alternation in nature (XIV), and propounding a perplexing riddle in involved language about his 'tortoise-lyre,' which Hermes gave him (XV).

ARMORUM IUDICIUM.

THE play opens with the funeral games at the pyre of Achilles, and the announcement by Agamemnon that the Arms of Achilles will be the prize for the best warrior (I, II). The competition is open to all who desire to contend (III); but Ajax, who considers his own claims to be paramount, protests against this method of decision (IV), and refuses to be pitted against Ulysses [cp. Ov. Metam. 13. 5 foll. and 16 foll.]. He takes his stand on his signal services to the Greek army (V); contemptuously comparing the record of Ulysses with his own (VI). Agamemnon refers the difficulty to Nestor (VII); who advises that the question be committed to the Trojan prisoners, who are bound by an oath to confess which of the heroes had inflicted most suffering on the Trojans (VIII). Agamemnon accepts his counsel (IX). In X and XI we find an allusion to the greatness of Ajax before the evil spirit came upon him: but Ulysses sneers at the misplaced wrath of the unhappy man, which is directed against his innocent rival, rather than against the Trojan prisoners who gave the decision. To the monologue of Ajax before his suicide may be referred that bitter complaint of the ingratitude of the Atridae (XII), which was in later times chanted at the funeral games after the assassination of Caesar, 'ad miserationem et invidiam caedis eius' (SUET. Iul. 84).

CHRYSES.

In this play the story of Iphigenia in Tauris is produced in a novel form. Orestes, Pylades, and Iphigenia, who had carried off the image of Diana from her temple, encounter a storm on their voyage; and when the calm weather returns (I), they land on a promontory of the island Sminthe (II), and survey the spot (III). To this moment we may refer the reflections introduced on the instability of Fortune (IV [inc. fab. XIV, Ribb.]). Here they find the younger Chryses, son of the unfortunate Chryseis of the Iliad, serving as priest of Apollo. Thoas pursues the fugitives (V [inc. fab. LXXIII, Ribb.]), who, on being discovered, implore the protection of Chryses and the inhabitants of the isle (VI); and Orestes reveals to the citizens the terrible deed of bloodguiltiness to which he has been driven by the importunities of his countrymen, and the command of the gods (VII). But Thoas calls on the priest to exact expiation for the theft of the sacred image; yet only the actual perpetrator of the sacrilege is to be put to death, that is to say, Orestes. But which is Orestes? and which is Pylades? Each of the friends generously claims the name (VIII [inc. fab. XIII, Ribb.]), and when Thoas is baffled, they urge him to put them both to death. However, Thoas thinks he has found the real culprit, and congratulates himself on the discovery (IX). When Chryses finds that Orestes and Iphigenia are the children of Agamemnon, all the bitter memories of the past come back upon him, and a deep desire for revenge (X). Orestes' fate seems sealed, and Thoas contemptuously laughs at the prayer of his captives (XI). At this moment of danger, Chryseis intervenes, reveals to her son the secret of his birth, and turns away his wrath (XII). Chryses is her son, not by Apollo but by Agamemnon, and so Orestes is his brother. The priest at once espouses the cause of the fugitives, and delivers them from the hands of Thoas, who falls in the fray.

Two famous passages (XIII, XIV), conceived in the spirit of the Anaxagorean philosophy, have been generally referred to this play, though it is difficult to harmonise them with the general plot. If they are put into the mouth of Chryses, the sentiments seem inconsistent with the position of a priest of the gods. Although the references in Cicero and Nonius seem to be to the 'Chryses,' the striking similarity between these passages and a fragment (836) from the 'Chrysippos' of Euripides suggests that the word 'Chryses' is given in error for 'Chrysippos'; and indeed the variants in the MSS. of Cicero point in the same direction.

DULORESTES.

ORESTES appears on the stage disguised as a slave (δοῦλος), driving his flock from Delphi to Mycenae (I). At the palace a marriage is about to be celebrated (II, III); for the unnatural Clytemnestra has determined to give her daughter Electra to Oeax, one of the sons of Nauplius (IV), who drew the Greek fleet to its destruction on the Euboean coast by false fire-signals (V). Such an alliance with the avowed enemies of her country would prevent the daughter of Agamemnon from succeeding in any scheme of vengeance! Aegisthus, the swaggering tyrant (VI), tries by threats to force her into compliance (VII); but, revolting from the shame which would attend such a union (VIII), she defies her mother's authority. She is strengthened in her resolve by a conviction that her brother is not far off (IX), and having found him she decides at once upon vengeance (X), and conspires with him against Aegisthus, though the task is a hard one (XI), as all the sons of Nauplius rally to his aid. Aegisthus seems, in his perplexity, to have consulted some oracle, and to have received a dubious answer (XII); but Oeax interprets the reply, and announces its meaning to be that Clytemnestra must have no chance of recognising Orestes (XIII). Pylades begins the struggle by slaying some of the defenders of Aegisthus, and, after a long civil strife between the partisans of Clytemnestra and of Agamemnon, the guilty tyrant and his adulterous consort are put to death.

HERMIONA.

A STORY of love and rivalry. Neoptolemus comes to Delphi to consult the god as to the childlessness of his wife Hermione, who, with Menelaus and the old Tyndareus, accompanies him (I). At the same moment arrives Orestes with his friend Pylades to obtain deliverance from the haunting Furies (II). Orestes seeks refuge from them in the temple of Apollo, but they lay wait for him at the entrance, and pounce upon him as he departs. Then he espies Hermione, once his betrothed, but stolen from him by Neoptolemus with the connivance of Menelaus. He cannot believe his eyes, except he may touch her (III)! He determines to claim her. Hermione is torn between love and duty: she recalls the shadow thrown on her life by the guilt of Helen, her mother (IV). In vain she invokes Eloquence, 'the queen that sways all hearts' to find some convincing plea (V): she dreads to think of the calamity she may be bringing upon her family (VI). Orestes declares that Hermione had been irrevocably given to him (VII). The rivals assert their respective claims: Neoptolemus recounts his own achievements and those of his sire Achilles (VIII, IX): to him alone the Greeks owe their return from Troy (X). He taunts Tyndareus with his old age (XI); and his ill-judged haste in betrothing his grand-daughter in the absence of her father Menelaus (XII). Orestes retorts that Neoptolemus had only married Hermione in the hope of succeeding to the throne of Sparta (XIII). He has powerful advocates in the fanatical priests of Apollo, for Neoptolemus had offended the god; and, at the moment of his expiatory sacrifice, they fling themselves upon him. Orestes espouses the cause of the god; Neoptolemus is slain, and Orestes, in recompense, is purified from his bloodguiltiness. Hermione returns to her old lover, and peace is made between Argos and Delphi (XIV).

ILIONA.

Polydorus, youngest son of Priam and Hecuba, was entrusted to the care of his sister Iliona, wife of Polymestor the king of the treacherous (I) Thracians. She, however, brought him up at her breast (II), as her own child, letting her husband believe that the child which she had born him was really Polydorus. While the two children were still young, Troy fell, and the Achaeans, desiring to destroy the whole house of Priam, bribed Polymestor by a gift of gold and the promise of the possession of Electra (III), to slay Polydorus. Through Iliona's device it was Polymestor's own son that was slain. The bloodstained ghost of the supposed Polydorus rises from the waves, and appears to his sleeping mother, awaking her with the piteous tale of his murder (IV). This is the scene about which Horace (Sat. 2. 3. 60 foll.) tells the amusing story of the drunken Fufius, who played the part of Iliona, sleeping through the passionate appeal of Catienus, who represented the murdered boy. Iliona cries to the poor ghost to stay and repeat the story (V), and she sends her servants to search the shore for the corpse (VI, VII, inc. fab. XXXI, Ribb.). Polydorus, who had visited the oracle of Apollo, learns with surprise at the shrine that his ancestral city had been burned, his father slain, and his mother carried away captive. When he returns to Thrace he finds that none of these disasters had occurred (VIII); but Iliona then tells him the secret of his birth (IX, X ex inc. inc. fab. XLII, Ribb.), and the brother and sister conspire against Polymestor, whom they first blind, and then slay (XI, XII). Fuller tidings come of the fall of Troy (XIII); of the fate of Hecuba, and of Cassandra, once beloved by Apollo (XIV). Polydorus remains as the hope of the royal house; but the chance of his restitution to the kingdom is slight indeed (XV)!

NIPTRA.

THIS play probably follows the lines of the Νίπτρα ἢ Ὀδυσσεὺς ἀκανθοπλήξ of Sophocles. Telegonus, son of Ulysses by Circe, having been wrecked one dark night on the shore of Ithaca, enters unwittingly his father's house, where the old hero was resting after his many years of wandering. As in the Odyssey, the old nurse (I) bathes her master's feet (Νίπτρα = foot-bath), and recognises him by his winning address and his fair, soft skin (II, III). He talks with her as if he had only just returned from Troy, and not from that later wandering to the land of the Thesprotians, whither, after the Slaying of the Suitors, he journeyed in accordance with the command laid on him by Teiresias in the Νέκυια. He speaks of the rude boat he built (IV), and of his visit to the Cyclops of Aetna (V, VI). Warned by an oracle that danger awaited him at the hands of his son, Ulysses repels from his doors this new intruder, who calls him 'father.' Telegonus resists; and in the fray which follows he wounds Ulysses with his spear, tipped with the bone of a poisonous sea-fish. Ulysses is brought to the stage on a litter (VII), tortured with pain from his wound. And now the mystery is cleared up. The stranger is indeed his son, and the fatal weapon has been put in his hand by the jealous Circe (VIII). Ulysses recognises the fulfilment of the warning, and resigns himself to death (IX).

TEUCER.

THE opening of the play sets before us the aged Telamon exhausted by fruitless wanderings in search of tidings about Ajax and Teucer (I), and the Salaminian matrons in mourning for their lost sons (II). When Teucer appears on the scene without his brother or the young Eurysaces, he is received by his father with the most furious denunciation (III): the effect of the words being studiously heightened by the frequent recurrence of the sibilant s (sigmatismus), and the homoeoteleuta. Teucer in his reply describes the despatch of the fleet from Troy by the reluctant Agamemnon (IV, ex inc. inc. frag. XLVI, Ribb.). The ships set sail: Teucer commands the Thessalian contingent, as well as his own vessels (V). The voyage begins in the sunlight, among the sporting dolphins (VI, VII, inc. fab. XLIV, XLV, Ribb.): but at sundown the storm bursts on them (VIII, IX); and in the confusion Eurysaces is lost to sight. Yet Telamon admits no excuse, and refuses to listen to Teucer till his grandson is restored to him. The old man is described as plunged in grief, and brooding on Teucer's guilt (XI), who, however, is not wanting in friends to speak for him (XII), and to be hopeful of a reconciliation (XIII). But all is in vain! How Teucer quits his country to found a new home in the Cyprian Salamis is told by Horace (Od. I. 7. 21 foll.): but the only reference to this among the fragments of Pacuvius is the famous line, the original of which appears in Aristoph. Plut. 1151 πατρὶς γάρ ἐστι πᾶσ' ἵν' ἂν πράττῃ τις εὖ (XIV, ex inc. inc. fab. XLIX, Ribb.).

FABULA PRAETEXTA.

PAULUS.

The play deals with the exploits of the consul, L. Aemilius Paulus, the conqueror of the Macedonian king Perseus at Pydna, B. C. 168. Another notable character is introduced, the young Scipio Nasica, who fought on the heights of Mount Olympus with Milon, one of the generals of Perseus, and forced his way over the dizzy pass (I). We see Paulus on the morning of the battle sacrificing to Jupiter, from whom, through Ascanius, the gens Aemilia traced its descent (II). We see the Roman and Macedonian armies in the thick of the fight (III). An episode in the battle is the exploit of young Marcus, son of the old Cato, who was Censor in B. C. 184. Marcus lost his sword in the struggle, and fearing the disgrace which would fall on his honoured father if his son was found without a sword, he prays to Jupiter for instant aid (IV), and after strenuous efforts recovers his lost weapon.

ASOTUS.

A YOUNG profligate tells the story, how he had surreptitiously introduced his mistress into his father's house (I). The father seems to have announced to some friend his intention of cutting off his son's allowance. 'Then he will borrow,' says the friend. 'Let him, for aught I care!' replies the father (II). The familiar character of the parasite is next introduced, as a regular 'barathrum macelli' (Hor. Ep. I. 15. 31) (III). He has been kicked out of the club of boon-companions (IV); and reproaches his patron with his cruel indifference.

HYMNIS.

AN angry father purchased a Milesian slave-girl, and made her over to one of his own friends, in order to 'block the pass in the way of his son,' who is in love with her (I). The youth evidently tries to stop the bargain that is being made with the leno; however, he is plainly told that to succeed in love one must be supplied with 'the sinews of war' (II). He seeks the advice of a confidential slave, whose counsel to him is, not to attempt a Quixotic combat, 'with a sword against a brass caldron' (III). But the young man is not convinced: his motto is 'a short life and a merry one.' Leave the old man to drag out his years 'drop by drop' to the very end! (IV, V).

PLOCIUM.

A special interest attaches to this comedy, because Aul. Gellius (2. 23) takes occasion, by comparing it with the original play of Menander, to show the great inferiority of the Latin poet. The title is obscure: some have suggested that it is the actual name of the heroine; others, with better reason, render it 'Ringlet,' or 'Necklace'—something, at any rate, which serves as a material piece of evidence in the dénouement of the play. The plot is probably somewhat as follows: Two families live near together on friendly terms. The head of one of these is an elderly husband, smarting under the tyranny and jealous suspicion of his ugly but richly-dowered wife, Crobyle, who has compelled him to part with his dangerously attractive waiting-maid, and coarsely boasts of her success. In the bitterness of his soul he tells the story to his crony; and they pass very uncomplimentary remarks on the haughty and repulsive dame (I–III). Crobyle's son was betrothed to a daughter of the other family; and the marriage was about to take place, when the startling news is brought that the girl has given birth to a child. The marriage is hastily postponed (IV); and we gather from the corresponding play of Menander that Crobyle urges her son to forget his old love, and to marry a rich relation. But the unfortunate girl, who has been repudiated, has a faithful friend in her slave Parmeno. He gains the confidence of the young man, and they discuss various views of life—how it is money which covers 'the multitude of sins' (V); how old age brings with it many things one would rather not see (VI); how one must make the best of bad bargains (VII, VIII). Then Parmeno begins to calculate back the months before the birth of this child; and he reminds the young man of a certain night, when he had been in the company of a fair young stranger, whom he had not recognised (IX–XI). And we may suppose that the 'Necklace' somehow turns out to be the proof of his own fatherhood of the child, whose birth seemed to have ruined his hopes. Evidently all difficulties were surmounted, and Parmeno gained his freedom for his success (XII).

The comments made by Gellius (2. 23) are as follows: 'Caecili Plocium legebamus; haudquaquam mihi et qui aderant displicebat. Libitumst Menandri quoque Plocium legere, a quo istam comoediam verterat. Sed enim postquam in manus Menander venit, a principio statim, di boni, quantum stupere atque frigere quantumque mutare a Menandro visus est! Diomedis hercle arma et Glauci non dispari magis pretio existimata sunt. Accesserat dehinc lectio ad eum locum in quo maritus senex super uxore divite atque deformi querebatur, quod ancillam suam, non inscito puellam ministerio et facie haut inliberali, coactus erat venundare, suspectam uxori quasi pelicem. Nihil dicam ego quantum differat: versus utrimque eximi iussi et aliis ad iudicium faciundum exponi. Menander sic:

ἐπ' ἀμφότερα νῦν ἡ 'πίκληρος ἡ καλὴ μέλλει καθευδήσειν. κατείργασται μέγα καὶ περιβόητον ἔργον· ἐκ τῆς οἰκίας ἐξέβαλε τὴν λυποῦσαν ἣν ἐβούλετο, ἵν' ἀποβλέπωσι πάντες εἰς τὸ Κρωβύλης πρόσωπον, ᾗ τ' εὐγνωστος οὖσ' ἐμὴ γυνὴ δέσποινα, καὶ τὴν ὄψιν ἣν ἐκτήσατο·

ὄνος ἐν πιθήκοις ἐστὶ δὴ τὸ λεγόμενον.
τοῦτο δὲ σιωπᾶν βούλομαι τὴν νύκτα τὴν πολλῶν κακῶν ἀρχηγόν. οἴμοι Κρωβύλην

φρύαγμά πως ὑπόστατον; μὰ τὸν Δία τὸν Ὀλύμπιον καὶ τὴν Ἀθηνᾶν, οὐδαμῶς, παιδισκάριον θεραπευτικὸν δὲ καὶ λόγου τάχιον.

[Then follows the quotation from Caecilius (I) 'is demum miser . . . misere': after which Gellius proceeds] 'Praeter venustatem autem rerum atque verborum, in duobus libris nequaquam parem, in hoc equidem soleo animum attendere, quod quae Menander praeclare et apposite et facete scripsit, ea Caecilius ne qua potuit quidem conatus est enarrare, sed quasi minime probanda praetermisit et alia nescio quae inimica inculcavit; et illud Menandri de vita hominum media sumptum, simplex et verum et delectabile, nescio quo pacto omisit. Idem enim ille maritus senex cum altero sene vicino colloquens et uxoris locupletis superbiam deprecans haec ait, ἔχω δ' ἐπίκληρον Λάμιαν· οὐκ εἴρηκά σοι τοῦτ'; εἶτ' ἄρ' οὐχί; κυρίαν τῆς οἰκίας ἅπασι δ' ἀργαλέα 'στίν, οὐκ ἐμοὶ μόνῳ, υἱῷ, πολὺ μᾶλλον θυγατρί.

πρᾶγμ' ἄμαχον λέγεις.

Caecilius vero hoc in loco ridiculus magis quam personae isti quam tractabat aptus atque conveniens videri maluit. Sic enim haec corrupit': [Then follows frag. II 'Sed tua morosane . . . potaveris'] 'Quid de illo quoque loco in utraque comoedia posito existimari debeat manifestum est, cuius loci haec ferme sententia: filia hominis pauperis in pervigilio vitiata est. Ea res clam patrem fuit, et habebatur pro virgine. Ex eo vitio gravida mensibus exactis parturit. Servus bonae frugi cum pro foribus domus staret et propinquare partum erili filiae atque omnino vitium esse oblatum ignoraret, gemitum et ploratum audit puellae in puerperio enitentis: timet, irascitur, suspicatur, miseretur, dolet. Hi omnes motus eius affectionisque animi in Graeca quidem comoedia mirabiliter acres et illustres, apud Caecilium autem pigra istaec omnia et a rerum dignitate atque gratia vacua sunt. Post vbi idem servus percontando quod acciderat repperit, has aput Menandrum versus facit:

ὦ τρισκακοδαίμων, ὅστις ὢν πένης γαμεῖ καὶ παιδοποιεῖθ'. ὡς ἀλόγιστός ἐστ' ἀνήρ.
ὃς μήτε φυλακὴν τῶν ἀναγκαίων ἔχει, μήτ' ἂν ἀτυχήσας εἰς τὰ κοινὰ τοῦ βίου ἐπαμφίεσθαι τοῦτο δύναται χρήμασιν, ἀλλ' ἐν ἀκαλύπτῳ καὶ ταλαιπώρῳ βίῳ χειμαζόμενος ζῇ, τῶν μὲν ἀνιαρῶν ἔχων τὸ μέρος ἁπάντων, τῶν δ' ἀγαθῶν οὐ δυνάμενος.
ὑπὲρ γὰρ ἑνὸς ἀλγῶν, ἅπαντας νουθετῶ.

Ad horum autem sinceritatem veritatemque verborum an adspiraverit Caecilius consideremus. Versus sunt hi Caecili, trunca quaedam ex Menandro dicentis et consarcientis verba tragici tumoris: [Then follows frag. V 'is demum . . . factio.'] Itaque, ut supra dixi, cum haec Caecili seorsum lego neutiquam videntur ingrata ignavaque, cum autem Graeca comparo et contendo, non puto Caecilium sequi debuisse quod assequi nequiret.

SYNEPHEBI.

In place of the ordinary lover, complaining of the severity or stinginess of his father, we have, as an amusing surprise, a young man sorely vexed at the embarrassing indulgence and generosity of his parent, and envying the lot of those happy sons who can enjoy to the full the delight of over-reaching a father's niggardliness (I). His comrade has an equally strange story to tell, for he announces as a prodigy demanding instant expiation, the discovery of a courtesan who refused to take money from her lover (II). Another touch of unselfishness is given in Frag. III.

BOEOTIA.

(AULUS GELLIUS (3. 3. 4) informs us that Varro assigned the 'Boeotia' to Plautus, basing his judgment on the passage here quoted as unmistakably in the Plautine style. But the allusion to the introduction of sun-dials (Pliny, N. H. 7. 60) seems to make the date between B. C. 174 and 154. It is evident from the passage in Pliny that Varro himself knew the date of their introduction, although he ascribes the passage to Plautus. The parasite found his own belly the best time-keeper!)

(THE identity in meaning of Imbrex and Tegula suggests that the author of the 'Neaera' is the P. Licinius Tegula, the writer of a sacred hymn ordered by the decemvirs, B. C. 200, to be sung in the streets of Rome by a chorus of nine maidens, so as to expiate certain prodigies [Livy 31. 12]. The fragment quoted of the 'Neaera' is the complaint of some dashing officer that his wife is not sufficiently distinguished by her name Neaera, which he proposes should be altered to Neriene, or Nerio, the spouse of the War-god.)

THIS title is said to have been a colloquial name for a sort of dumpy bucket; but the fragments throw no light on the title. A joke is made upon the mincing pronunciation of young men of fashion, who are not strong enough to say the simplest word in full. 'Ēdepol,' 'medius fidius,' or even 'medi,' entail too much exertion. 'Edi' is the utmost they can do.

FULLONIA : sc. fabula, i. e. 'The play about the Fullers' ; a set of men whose occupation afforded endless amusement to the Latin comic poets. Here the merriment seems to turn partly on the quarrelling between the Fullers and the Weaving-women, and partly on the bickering between a husband and wife. Probably a Fuller had married a Weaver with a bit of money of her own, and she chafes at his extravagance (I). Her husband taunts her with the days of his courtship, and the change since then (II) ; to which she retorts with much self-satisfaction (III). Then there is quarrelling between the employer and his workmen (IV) ; and between the Fullers, 'who never get a holiday' (V), and the lazy women 'who take ten years over one gown' (VI). But the Weavers think themselves indispensable (VII), and laugh at the Fullers for their amphibious life (VIII). But both sides agree in despising the work of the delving rustic (IX).

'THE lady of Setia'—a dull, secluded town overlooking the Pomptine Marshes. The good citizen, who does not like this swamp, would gladly have the water led from the Tiber to his town (I). It may be the same provincial wit who sees how far a little wisdom goes (II). But he is so cautious that he is afraid to marry (III); and his friend Caeso has to try and raise his pluck (IV). The young lady is so grand! (V) and such a paragon of perfection, that, in praising her, one must add 'without offence!' to avert the 'fascinatio' which waits on boasting (VI). For frag. PALLIATAE.

EPICLEROS.

THE Epicleros (Heiress) of Menander opened with a monologue. Turpilius has changed this to a dialogue between the slave Stephanio, and his uneasy young master, who rouses him from his bed to roam about with him at night (I). Stephanio protests against this caprice (II). The young man is pressed by his parents to marry the heiress: they assure him she is the best of wives for him (III); and the father hopes that their advice will not make a breach between them and their son (IV). It is difficult to fit in the remaining fragments. Perhaps the young man, wishing to wash his hands of the affair, appeals to the 'cognatus,' who by rights ought to marry the orphan heiress himself (V). The man is touched by the youth's sorrow (VI), and he acknowledges that the father's importunity has made his son 'rich in excuses' (VII). Finally, the relative seems to accept his duty (VIII), and the young man is relieved.

LEUCADIA.

'THE Lady of Leucas' is a parody on the story of Sappho. The Phaon of the play is a hideous Lesbian boatman, who once ferried over the water Venus, disguised as an old woman, so evidently poor that Phaon excused her the fare. In recompense, she made him, in spite of his ugliness, the idol of all the women. One of the Lesbian damsels is so smitten that she turns from her old lover, and gives all her heart to Phaon. Her lover is amazed at her choice and at Phaon's grand airs (I–IV). He attempts his former familiarities; but the girl repulses him (V), and makes desperate love to Phaon (VI), confessing her jealousy of some other woman (VII). Phaon being obdurate, the girl wanders to the desolate cliff (VIII), and, calling the gods and the winds to her aid, takes the Lovers' Leap (IX). Phaon orders out a boat (X), and the poor girl is rescued, very wet and cold (XI). But the charm is broken. Dorcium is reconciled to her old lover (XII), and holiday clothes are donned for the marriage (XIII).

TRAGOEDIAE.

ANDROMEDA.

THE first fragment (I) of the Andromeda suggests that the sea-monster, to whom the princess was to be surrendered, came up from the depths month after month to devour his prey (I). Perhaps the Prologue introduced Cepheus or Cassiopea lamenting over the terrible floods and snow-storms which the angry Neptune had sent upon the land (II). The wrath of the gods can only be appeased by the sacrifice of Andromeda to the monster; and already Perseus has promised to be her champion (III); but he is baffled by the hopelessness of the task and ashamed at his own weakness (IV). Andromeda is chained in a narrow, circumscribed spot [templum], heaped up with dead men's bones (V), as she herself describes it (VI, VII). When Cepheus promises the hand of Andromeda to her rescuer, Perseus assures him this gracious act will not be wasted (VIII). By-and-by, Cepheus repents his promise (IX, ex inc. inc. fab. CIII, Ribb.): he professes that he cannot bear to part with the darling of his old age (X). But Perseus will not give up his love; and if her father seeks to part them, he may as well slay them both (XI).

ARMORUM IUDICIUM.

IN this drama Accius omits the motive which Pacuvius introduces from the Cyclics: that the decision is referred to the Trojan captives. But in their main outlines the two plays are similar. Though the heroes are eager, one and all, to succeed to the inheritance of the Arms of Achilles (I), Ajax will not take part in the tournament, nor be pitted against Ulysses (II, III). The decision is to turn, he says, on the ruling (dictio), which had been laid down by Thetis (or, perhaps, by Calchas), that the Arms may be given only to a man like Achilles. And Ajax puts his claim on two grounds: 1, relationship—for Ajax and Achilles had both the same grandsire; and, 2, his own deeds of valour (IV, ex inc. inc. fab. XXX Ribb.). He recounts the feigned madness of Ulysses at the beginning of the war; the consequences of which were averted only by the sagacity of Palamedes (V, ex inc. inc. fab. XXXI Ribb.). Ironically, he pretends to credit Ulysses with his own great achievements (VI, ex inc. inc. fab. XXXII Ribb.). After his fit of frenzy has passed, Ajax thinks with grief of the sorrow which will fall upon Telamon (VII): he demands a sight of Eurysaces, whom Tecmessa had removed, with a caution which was at least excusable (VIII); and he questions his wife as to all that took place during his fit of madness; though she can scarcely dare to answer freely (IX). Then comes the famous prayer of Ajax for his son (X, Soph. Aj. 550). The Chorus is in great anxiety about the fate of the mighty champion of Greece (XI), whose loss of Minerva's friendship is deplored (XII). The play ends with the reconciliation between Teucer and the Atridae, by the intervention of Ulysses (XIII). 'Let all old feuds be buried in a general amnesty!' (XIV).

ATREUS.

IT is probable that the prologue to this play recounted the victory of Pelops over Oenomaus, the marriage of Hippodamia, and the birth of Atreus (I). Atreus, who is the true type of a despot (II), is bitterly incensed at the return of his brother Thyestes from exile, uninvited. Some signal punishment he must devise (III) for the man who had seduced his wife Aërope (IV, V), and had stolen the Golden Lamb, on which depended the prosperity of the kingdom (VI). Perhaps Atreus welcomed his brother with a suspicious cordiality, which would account for the warning against treachery, which Thyestes conveys to his sons who had accompanied him (VII, VIII). Thyestes is bidden, as a special honour, to a royal banquet at which no other guest might be present (IX). Some eye-witness describes the preparation of the horrid meal (X) by the hands of the inhuman Atreus, whose crime had thrown all his brother's misdeeds in the shade (XI). The Sun turns back his car, and the thunder rolls angrily, and terrifies the Chorus of Mycenean citizens (XII). After the meal, Thyestes enquires of his sons' welfare; and, when Atreus shows him their hands and feet, he prays that he may be allowed to bury them. 'The sons are entombed in the sire' is the awful enigma that is hurled at him by Atreus (XIII). The unhappy father denounces his brother's broken faith, which Atreus denies he ever plighted (XIV); and aghast at the horrors in which he had taken an unconscious part (XV), Thyestes feels that all his hopes of advancement are ruined, and it only remains to him to hide himself in exile (XVI).

EPIGONI—ERIPHYLA.

WHEN Eriphyle, bribed by the gift of a necklace, had sent her husband Amphiaraus forth to certain death, in the war of the Seven against Thebes, the duty of punishing the treacherous wife devolved upon her sons Alcmaeon and Amphilochus. When, ten years later, the Epigoni gathered their avenging army again at Thebes, the oracle promised them victory if Alcmaeon should be chosen leader. His stern duty bade him remain at home, but Eriphyle, bribed by Thersander and Polynices, sends her son to the battle. Thebes is taken, and the heroes return. In obedience to his father's mandate, and in compliance with the oracle, Alcmaeon slays his mother; and, like Orestes, he becomes at once the victim of the avenging Furies. The play opens with an altercation between Alcmaeon and Thersander, who urges the young hero, on whom so many eyes are fixed, to undertake the command (I): his own Argives are impatient for the fray (II). Alcmaeon commends coolness and deliberation (III): Thersander appears to philosophise upon the temperament of the brave man (IV). Amphilochus is now seen on the stage (V). He seems to have inherited something of his father's gift of divination. Alcmaeon, who burns to avenge his father, speaks, apparently, of some importunate apparition, which urges him on (VI): he cannot understand his brother's plea of delay (VII). The ghost of Amphiaraus recounts the treachery of his wife (VIII, ex inc. inc. fab. LXXVII Ribb.); at whose bidding he went forth, with death full in view (IX, ex inc. inc. fab. LXXVIII). Before the final catastrophe, Demonassa, Eriphyle's daughter, has a foreboding of her mother's danger, and Eriphyle seeks to understand her anxiety (X, XI). Alcmaeon braces himself to the terrible deed. There is his mother, still wearing the fatal necklace (XII)! He approaches her: she denounces his impiety (XIII, XIV); but the deed is done. Alcmaeon must seek expiation by burnt-offerings (XV), or by cleansing flood (XVI). But the curse of bloodguiltiness is upon him, and he must fly from the land.

EPINAUSIMACHE.

THIS title represents the μάχη ἐπὶ ταῖς ναυσι of Hom. Il. 13; but, in the drama of Accius, the death of Patroclus seems to precede the fighting at the ships. Patroclus has fallen, and Achilles burns for revenge. He is reminded that he has no armour in which to fight; to which he replies that his courageous spirit is armour enough for him (I). His friends seek to dissuade him from his rash venture (II): he has to remember that his very reputation is at stake (III).

But Achilles cares only, he says, for the approval of the good (IV): he will shake off this paralysing sorrow, which is no better than the helpless grief of (say) Patroclus' horse over his master (V). When Thetis comes with her Nereids and warns her son of his approaching doom, his mind can take in no other thought except that of vengeance (VI): his friend's corpse is more in his eyes than whole heaps of slain (VII). When he is armed for the fray, the battle that begins at the ships spreads to the Scamander, and from thence to the town; and none can resist this terrible warrior (VIII, IX), who is like a devouring flame in the pine forest (X, cp. Il. 20. 490 foll.). He returns from the field proud of his achievement (XI). His meeting with Hector was like that of two war-gods contending (XII): nor can Achilles conceal his satisfaction in thinking that, though he has restored to Priam his son's corpse, there is no more a Hector in the Trojan host (XIII, inc. fab. XIII Ribb.).

MEDEA SIVE ARGONAUTAE.

JASON has carried off Medea and the golden fleece from Colchis, and Aeetes is in hot pursuit of the fugitives. When the herdsmen on the banks of the Hister see the large bulk of the Argo—the first ship that has ever appeared there—they take it to be a huge sea-monster (I). As the vessel comes nearer they espy the young sailors aboard, and hear their melodious songs (II); and absorbed in wonder they leave their herds untended (III).

Jason and Medea explain to this simple folk how ships came to be built: how, as men gradually left their savage ways (IV), they felt the desire to see the world, and ships must be made to brave the perils of the deep (V). The Scythian king looks with awe on the famous sorceress (VI). Medea begins to be suspicious of Jason, and there is a tone of bitterness in her allusion to all she has done for him—taming the fire-breathing bulls (VII); and quelling the dragon, and the warriors that rose from the furrow (VIII, ex inc. inc. fab. XCIV)—without her aid Jason would have been a lost man (IX). Aeetes then appears upon the stage, lamenting the death of his sons (X); his sorrows being echoed by the Chorus in a Canticum (XI). The terrible murder by Medea of one of her brothers, to gain time when she and Jason were being pursued, may belong to this drama (XII, ex inc. inc. fab. XCIII).

MELEAGER.

OENEUS, father of Meleager, having neglected the due sacrifice to Diana, the goddess sent a huge wild-boar to ravage the harvest-fields of Calydon (I). Meleager had married Cleopatra, the type of the quiet housewife, the complete contrast to Atalanta, a daring huntress, who claims for women a full right to join in the chase (II). Far better that, than to be a husband's drudge! (III) Spartan maidens know how to use their womanhood! (IV, ex inc. inc. fab. CXI Ribb.) So when Meleager sallies forth to attack the boar, Atalanta joins him and boldly confronts the savage beast (V); her spear being the first to touch it. When Meleager has slain the monster, the country folk joyfully greet him (VI); and he gives the crown of victory and the skin of the boar to Atalanta (VII). But the sons of Thestius, the brother of Althaea, Meleager's mother, rob the maiden of her prize: and when she appeals to Meleager, he slays some of the robbers, and declares that the prize is hers alone (VIII), and that the men are but cowards (IX, ex inc. inc. fab. CXIII Ribb.). This bloodshed wakes the Erinnys of the family, and Althaea, half in terror for herself, and half in indignation at the death of the Thestiadae (X, XI), brings from its concealment the brand, with the preservation of which the life of Meleager was mysteriously bound up, and commits it to the flames (XII). Meleager, as the brand consumes, feels the curse working in him (XIII), and Althaea, aghast at her doing, bids her servant use his best speed (XIV, XV) to go and quench the brand. But it is too late! The mother feels the indelible shame she has brought on herself (XVI); and Meleager resigns himself to death (XVII).

MYRMIDONES.

The play opens with the despatch of the embassy sent to attempt a reconciliation between Achilles and Agamemnon (Hom. Il. 9). It also includes the going forth of Patroclus to battle. Antilochus, Nestor's son, the young friend of Achilles, seeks, even before the arrival of the embassy, to turn him from his obstinate purpose. But Achilles answers that his fixed resolve is not obstinacy but firmness (I). The ancient Phoenix admonishes his pupil (II); but Achilles defends himself (III), and expresses his readiness to leave Troy and return home (IV, cp. Il. 9. 356 foll.); and he upbraids Ajax for no longer espousing his cause or standing at his side (V). Antilochus and Patroclus seem to be pleading on behalf of some one—possibly Phoenix—whose freedom had given Achilles offence (VI): and the words of his rebuke are certainly severe (VII). As the news from the field grows more alarming, and the Myrmidons are impatient to take part in the fight, Patroclus tells Achilles the plain truth, that he will be looked upon as responsible for any disaster that may befall the Achaean host (VIII). It is doubtful whether this last fragment is to be referred to the 'Myrmidones' or to the 'Achilles'; if they are two distinct plays.

OENOMAUS.

OENOMAUS, King of Pisa, father of the beautiful Hippodamia, having been warned that death would come to him from his son-in-law, kept at bay all his daughter's suitors by the condition that they should race against his famous team, and, if conquered, be beheaded. Pelops came to the ordeal, and at once won the heart of Hippodamia by his kingly beauty. The lovers bribe Myrtilus, the royal charioteer, to draw the linch-pin from the wheel, so that the car of Oenomaus was overthrown. Pelops wins Hippodamia, and puts his accomplice Myrtilus to death. Pelops, in the play, announces his intention of entering the lists (I); though he sees with horror the heads of the unsuccessful suitors at the palace gates (II). He assures Oenomaus that he need have no fear from the warning of the oracle (III), which seems to have been revealed to the king in the early hours of the morning, 'when dreams are true' (IV). But Oenomaus felt that some malign influence was sapping his power, like the undermining waters that fret the base of the cliff (V). Great preparations are made for the contest, and a solemn sacrifice to the gods performed (VI). Then the race begins, and as Oenomaus gallops forward, we may imagine that Pelops sends after him the warning cry that his hours are numbered (VII).

PHILOCTETES.

In this play Accius seems to have borrowed freely from Aeschylus, while he follows the general outline of the Sophoclean drama, and introduces details from Euripides : as, for example, in the opening scene, where the canticum is sung by a chorus of sailors who have accompanied Ulysses and Diomede to Lemnos (I). Ulysses replies by describing, in similar verse, the island scenery, as he knew it long ago (II). A Lemnian comes on the stage, and Ulysses questions him about the abode of Philoctetes (III), and learns how he clothes and feeds himself (IV), and how wild and dangerous is his temper (V, VI). Philoctetes describes, either in monologue or to some friend, his painful sufferings (VII), his lonely home that rings with his cries (VIII), and his trust to his arrows for his daily food (IX); a use of weapons which, as a warrior, he despises (X). He espies and accosts Ulysses, whom he does not recognise, and whose arrival surprises him (XI); and, though he is ashamed to be found in his condition of savagery and squalor (XII), he conducts him to his cavern (XIII), and is drawn on to tell him the adventures of his companions in arms. He enquires about the Arms of Achilles, and bitterly regrets the award (XIV). The wily Ulysses seeks to win his confidence, and to gain possession of the coveted arrows. The arrival at this crisis of a Trojan embassy with tempting proposals, intending to conciliate Philoctetes and to rob him of his arrows, has half persuaded the hero (XV); but he remembers that it is a Phrygian Trojan who has been the source of all his woes (XVI). After a long struggle with conflicting feelings, the patriotism and self-respect of Philoctetes carry the day; and he turns aside from the temptations offered by the Trojans, and, in spite of his suffering (XVII) he accompanies the Greeks on board their ship.

PHOENISSAE.

THE prologue opens like that in the Phoenissae of Euripides (I). Accius adopts the form of the story which represents Oedipus as making over the sovereignty to his sons, to be enjoyed by each in alternate years (II). He has pronounced no curse upon them; the arrangement he proposes is to secure concord (III), and to give each son a share of his father's power (IV). After his year on the throne, Eteocles refuses to make way for Polynices. Polynices protests; he has not enjoyed the privileges which his father designed for him (V). Eteocles replies by a brutal dismissal of his brother (VI); who, in quitting the city, bids farewell to all its holy places (VII). Thebes must be saved (so the seers say) by the sacrifice of one of Creon's sons—not Haemon the elder (VIII), who is betrothed to Antigone, but Menoeceus. Thebes is besieged, and we see some one of the royal house, perhaps Haemon, superintending the defences, and looking to the wounded (IX). The drama ends with Creon's command to Oedipus to quit the city (X); and the bitter complaint of the old man at this crowning hardship, which robs him of all he has (XI).

PRAETEXTAE.

BRUTUS.

THE scene opens in the camp at Ardea, changing to the house of Lucretia. The last scene is the Roman Forum. King Tarquin, while besieging Ardea, has a dream, which he recounts to his Seer (I). Tarquin had put to death the elder brother of L. Junius Brutus, and the younger brother only saved his own life by playing the part of a fool, and so diverting the king's suspicion. The Seer interprets the dream (II). Then must follow in order the drinking-bout in the tent of Sextus; the challenge about the best wife; the visit to Collatia; the proof of Lucretia's modest worth; the guilty passion of Sextus; the outrage on Lucretia; the terrible confession of the innocent wife (III), and her suicide; the oath of Brutus, and his speech in the Forum, in which he recalls the loyalty of Servius Tullius (IV). [This line Cicero (Pro Sest. 58) declares to have been applied to him, amid thunders of applause in the theatre, where the play was being acted: 'nominatim sum appellatus in Bruto.'] The last fragment gives the establishment of consuls, and the intention of the office (V).

DECIUS.

THIS play records the victory of the two consuls, Q. Fabius Maximus Rullianus and P. Decius Mus over the joint armies of the Samnites and Gauls, at Sentinum, B. C. 295. It contrasts the cool, deliberate temper of Fabius with the impetuosity of Decius, 'ferocior et aetate et vigore animi' (Liv. 10. 28); and describes the solemn act by which Decius, following the example of his father in the Latin War (B. C. 340), devotes himself for the salvation of the Roman army. The scene opens with the camp at night: 'All well' is reported (I). A scout comes in from Clusium, and Fabius questions him as to the disposition of the hostile troops (II). In forming the line of battle, Decius is posted opposite the Gauls (III). A hind pursued by a wolf runs between the lines; the hind approaches the Gauls and is slain; the wolf comes to the Romans. The pontiff Livius offers sacrifice, and prays for a happy fulfilment of the portent (IV). But the offerings seem less propitious for Decius (V). Fabius seeks to calm the ardour of Decius (VI); but he answers impatiently (VII). The Gauls march forward with their wild war-cries (VIII); and with their scythe-armed chariots throw the Roman squadrons into confusion. Decius takes his stern resolve (IX): he bids the pontiff dictate to him the formula of devotion, as his father used it (X); and dashing into the hosts of the enemy, he falls. But the day is won for Rome; and Fabius makes over the Gallic camp to the troops of Decius, who had done such signal service (XI).

Accius was the first to examine into the question of the authenticity of the plays currently assigned to Plautus. He rejects several that were commonly received:

Lucius Hostilius Tubulus, praetor B.C. 142, 'cum quaestionem inter sicarios exercuisset, ita aperte cepit pecunias ob rem iudicandam ut anno proximo P. Scaevola, tribunus plebis, ferret ad plebem, vellentne de ea re quaeri,' Cic. De Fin. 2. 16. Tubulus went into exile, and, being brought back to trial, poisoned himself. Cp. 'Cui Tubuli nomen non odio est?' Cic. De Fin. 5. 22.

Lupus, perhaps L. Cornelius Lentulus Lupus, consul B. C. 157, afterwards convicted, 'repetundarum reus.' Cf. Hor. Sat. 2. 1. 68 'famosisque Lupo cooperto versibus': Pers. Sat. 1. 115.

Carbo. There were three bad brothers, C., Cn., and M. Carbo. The allusion here seems to be to C. Papirius Carbo, the friend of Tib. Gracchus, suspected of being concerned in the murder of Scipio Africanus. Carbo (tribune B.C. 131, consul 120) was charged with some crime by the young orator L. Licinius Crassus, and without awaiting a trial, poisoned himself.

Neptuni filius. Cp. Aul. Gell. 15. 21 'ferocissimos et immanes et alienos ab omni humanitate, tamquam e mari genitos, Neptuni filios dixerunt.' If the reading filius putasset is right, filius must be scanned as a disyllable.

(Scaevola's ridicule of the affectation of Greek manners and speech by Albucius.)

Graecum te Albuci quam Romanum atque Sabinum, municipem Ponti, Tritani, centurionum, praeclarorum hominum ac primorum signiferumque, maluisti dici. graece ergo praetor Athenis,
id quod maluisti te, cum ad me accedis, saluto;
'χαῖρε,' inquam, 'Tite!'; lictores turma omnis cohorsque
'χαῖρε Tite!'—hinc hostis mi Albucius, hinc inimicus.

[CIC. De Fin. 1. 3.]

Titus Albucius is described by Cicero (Brut. 35) as 'doctus Graecis vel potius paene Graecus . . . fuit autem Athenis adulescens, perfectus Epicureus evaserat.' Q. Mucius Scaevola, on his way to his province as propraetor in Asia, B.C. 121, meets Albucius at Athens, and in recognition of his Greek tastes salutes him 'Graeco more'; his whole retinue taking up and carrying on the joke.

Ponti. Cp. Cic. De Senect. 10, 'ne vos quidem T. Pontii centurionis vires habetis.' Tritani, unknown.

II.

(A further caricature of the style of Albucius.)

Quam lepide λέξεις compostae ut tesserulae omnes arte pavimento atque emblemate vermiculato!

[Cic. Or. 44. 149.]

Cicero, in this passage, deprecates over-nicety in the combination of words: 'nam esset cum infinitus tum puerilis labor, quod apud Lucilium scite exagitat in Albucio Scaevola.' tesserulae, the small cubes forming a 'tessellated pavement.' arte, 'skilfully.' emblemate vermiculato, 'intertwined mosaic work.' ἔμβλημα is anything 'inlaid.' vermiculatus is that which runs in twining, 'wriggling,' patterns, as distinct from geometrical lines.

III.

(Scaevola refers to his son-in-law, L. Licinius Crassus, the most famous Roman orator before Cicero's time.)

Crassum habeo generum, ne rhetoricoteros tu seis!

[Cic. De Orat. 3. 43.]

rhetoricoteros, i.e. ῥητορικώτερος.

Book III.

See Porphyr. ad Hor. Sat. 1. 5. 1: 'Lucilio hac satura aemulatur Horatius iter suum a Roma Brundisium usque describens, quod et ille in tertio libro fecit, primo a Roma Capuam usque et inde fretum Siciliense.'

1.

(Orders are given to measure off the road exactly.)

viamque
degrumabis uti castris mensor facit olim.

[Nonius, s. v. grumae.]

degrumabis, from 'gruma' or 'groma,' a surveyor's pole.

II.

(Distance to Capua, and from Capua to the Straits.)

Millia porro bis quina octogena videbis commoda, de Capua quinquaginta atque ducenta.

[NONIUS, s. v. commodum.]

commoda is interpreted by Nonius as 'integra' = 'full,' 'complete.' The readings have been variously altered to harmonise the numbers with actual geography.

III.

(The rough work begins near Setia, on a mountain ridge rising from the Pomptine marshes.)

Verum haec ludus ibi susque omnia deque fuerunt, susque ea deque fuere, inquam, omnia, ludus iocusque;
illud opus durum, ut Setinum accessimus finem;
αἰγίλιποι montes, Aetnae omnes, asperi Athones.

[AUL. GELL. 16. 9.]

Susque deque, lit. 'both up and down'; i.e. as much up as down, 'about on a level.' So Gellius, l. c. 'significat autem "susque deque ferre" animo aequo esse, et quod accidit non magni pendere,' etc. Cp. Cic. Att. 14. 6. 1 'de Octavio susque deque.' αἰγίλιποι. The genuine Greek form is αἰγίλιψ, Hom. Il. 9. 15. The word may be connected with αἰγίς, 'storm.'

IV.

(The roads are bad.)

Praeterea omne iter est hoc labosum atque lutosum.

[NONIUS, s. v. labosum.]

Lābosum may be connected with lābes. Lamosus from lama (cp. Hor. Ep. 1. 13. 10) is a likely emendation.

V.

(Thick weather comes on, and soundings are taken.)

Hinc catapeiratera puer deorsum dedit, unctum plumbi pauxillum raudus linique mataxam.

[ISID. Etym. 19. 4.]

Catapeiratera, cp. καταπειρητηρίη, Hdt. 2. 5 = 'sounding-line'. The raudus (lump of metal) is greased, in order that it may bring up, when it is raised, shells, sand, or the like, to show the nature of the bottom. Mataxa (metaxa) is properly 'raw silk'; here used generally for a cord.

BOOK IV.

I.

(It is uncertain to what book the next fragment is to be referred; but it forms a good prelude to the general scope of the fourth as a protest against luxury and crime.)

Virtus, Albine, est pretium persolvere verum quis in versamur, quis vivimus rebus, potesse;
virtus est homini scire id quod quaeque valet res;
virtus scire homini rectum utile quid sit honestum,
quae bona quae mala item, quid inutile, turpe, inhonestum;
virtus, quaerendae finem rei scire modumque;
virtus, divitiis pretium persolvere posse;
virtus, id dare quod re ipsa debetur honori;
hostem esse atque inimicum hominum morumque malorum,

contra defensorem hominum morumque bonorum, magnificare hos, his bene velle, his vivere amicum;
commoda praeterea patriai prima putare, deinde parentum, tertia iam postremaque nostra.

[LACTANT. Inst. 6. 5. 2.]

II.

(The protest of 'Laelius the Wise' against gluttony.)

O lapathe, ut iactare, nec es satis cognitus qui sis!
in quo Laelius clamores σοφὸς ille solebat edere, compellans gumias ex ordine nostros.

[CIC. De Fin. 2. 8.]

Lapathe, 'sorrel,' how thou art lauded to the skies, and yet enough is not known of what you really are!' It is easy to talk finely about a light, vegetable diet, but who strictly keeps to it? in quo, perhaps 'over which,' i.e. on the occasion of his own meal of sorrel. Laelius, surnamed Sapiens, the intimate friend of the younger Scipio Africanus. In his honour, Cicero wrote his treatise 'Laelius sive de Amicitia.' From the teaching of Diogenes and Panaetius he had learned to accept the doctrines of the Stoic school. compellans = 'rebuking.' gumias = 'gluttons.'

III.

(Publius Gallonius is familiar to us from Horace, Sat. 2. 2. 47.)

'O Publi, o gurges, Galloni, es homo miser' inquit;
cenasti in vita numquam bene, cum omnia in ista consumis squilla atque acupensere cum decumano.

[CIC. ibid.]

Cum—cum, both are to be taken as conjunctions, as in Lucilius, 'cum pacem peto cum placo cum adeo et cum adpello meam.' decumano, 'huge'; as fluctus decumanus.

IV.

(The gladiators Aeserninus and Pucidianus.)

Aeserninus fuit Flaccorum munere quidam Samnis, spurcus homo, vita illa dignus locoque;

cum Pacideiano componitur, optimus multo post homines natos gladiator qui fuit unus.

[NONIUS, s. v. spurcum.]

Cicero, Ad Quint. Fr. 3. 4, says: 'cum Aesernino Samnite Pacidianus comparátus viderer, auriculam fortasse mordicus abstulisset.' Aesernius is armed as a 'Samnite' with the 'winged helmet, scutum, ocreae, and manica.' The pair is matched (componitur) at some show (munere); and we may suppose that Aesernius bit off his opponent's ear. unus = 'beyond all others,' as 'rem unam omnium difficillimam,' Cic. Brut. 6. 25.

V.

(Pacidianus expresses his hatred of Aeserninus.)

'Occidam illum equidem et vincam, si id quaeritis,' inquit;
'verum illud credo fore: in os prius accipiam ipse
quam gladium in stomacho furiae ac pulmonibus sisto.
odi hominem, iratus pugno; nec longius quicquam nobis, quam dextrae gladium dum accommodet alter:
usque adeo studio atque odio illius ecferor ira.

[CIC. Tusc. Disp. 3. 21.]

furiae = 'madman' (al. fŭri). Cp. Cic. Pro Sest. 14. 33 of Clodius, 'illa furia ac pestis patriae.' longius, i. e. 'more wearisome': he can hardly wait.

BOOK V.

(Lucilius complains of the neglect of a friend, who failed to visit him when he was sick.)

Quo me habeam pacto, tametsi non quaeris, docebo; debueris. hoc 'nolueris' et 'debueris' te si minus delectat quod τεχνίον Isocratium est ληρῶδεςque simul totum et συμμειρακιῶδες, non operam perdo. [AUL. GELL. 18. 8.]

Gellius, l. c. adds this comment: 'ὁμοιοτέλευτα et ἰσοκατάληκτα et πάρισα et ὁμοιόπτωτα, ceteraque huiusmodi scitamenta quae isti ἀπειρόκαλοι, qui se Isocraticos videri volunt, in conlocandis verbis immodice faciunt et rancide, quam sint insubida et inertia et puerilia, facetissime hercle significat in quinto saturarum Lucilius.'

mansti: if this correction be right, the meaning is, 'you continue to be like the rest of the world': if mansi, 'I continue to be, in spite of my illness, of no more interest to you than the rest of the world.' τεχνίον, so Scaliger: al. ἄτεχνον et I. συμμειρακιῶδες, 'altogether childish.' The general sense is, 'if you think the jingle of "nolueris" and "debueris" a mark of bad taste, I take no further trouble.'

BOOK VI.

I.

(A miser's passion for his money-bag.)

[NONIUS, s. v. bulga.]

bulga, a Gallic word; French, bougette; our budget.

[PORPHYR. ad Hor. Sat. 1. 5. 87.]

The last days of the Saturnalia were called the Sigillaria, when friends made presents of little images (sigilla, signa) to one another. Ausonius, Ecl. fer. Rom. 52, calls the festival 'festa Sigillorum.'

Book IX.

I.

(The difference between poëma and poësis.)

Nunc haec quid valeant, quidque huic intersiet illud cognosces. primum hoc quod dicimus esse poëma pars est parva poësis; id est, epigrammata, porro disticha, epistula item quaevis non magna poëmast.
illa poësis opus totum, ut tota Ilias summast una poësis, ut Annales Enni. Atque si hoc unumst, est maius multo quam quod dixi ante poëma.
quapropter dico: nemo, si culpat Homerum, perpetuum culpat, neque, quod dixi ante, poësin:
versum unum culpat, verbum, enthymema, locumve.

[Nonius, s. v. poësis, poëma.]

The general sense is plain, that a poëma is a short composition, and only the fragment of a poësis. But the readings are most uncertain. I have filled up a lacuna, as suggested by Bährens, and followed, generally, Wordsworth's ed. for the rest. enthymema, locumve, 'a (single) reflection or one passage.'

II.

(On the needlessness of writing a vowel double, in order to show that it is long.)

A primast: hinc incipiam, et quae nomina ab hoc sunt,
'AA geminum longa, A brevis syllaba.' nos tamen unum
hoc faciemus, et uno eodemque, ut dicimus, pacto scribemus pācem, plăcide, Iānum, āridum, ăcetum; Ἄρες Ἄρες Graeci ut faciunt.

[Scaurus, De Orthograph.]

Scaurus explains the passage: 'Accius' (L., the tragic poet) 'geminatis vocalibus scribi natura longas syllabas voluit.' Ἄρες Ἄρες, Hom. Il. 5. 31: see also Martial 9. 12 'Et Graeci quibus est nihil negatum, | et quos Ἄρες Ἄρες decet sonare.' Lucilius denies the use of this duplication of the vowel, and would write ā and ă identical, depending only on the pronunciation to distinguish them, ut dicimus.

III.

(In the plural we may write EI, in the gen. of the O declension; in such datives as ILLI only the single I.)

Iam 'puerei venere' E postremum facito atque I, ut pueri plures fiant. I si facis solúm,
'pupilli, pueri, Lucili,' hoc unius fiet.
'hoc illi factum est uni', tenue hoc facies I;
'haec illei fecere.' addes E, ut pinguius fiat.

BOOK XV.

(The Homeric Cyclops.)

Multa homines portenta in Homeri versibus ficta monstra putant: quorum in primis Polyphemus ducentos Cyclops longus pedes, et porro huic maius bacillum quam malus navi in corbita maximus ulla.

[NONIUS, s. v. corbita.]

See Hom. Odys. 9. 167 foll. His club (ib. 319 foll.) is described as ὅσσον θ' ἱστὸν νηὸς ἐεικοσόροιο μελαίνης, φορτίδος εὐρείης, which last words are the equivalent of corbita.

II.

(Only children are frightened at goblins.)

[LACTANT. I. 22. 13.]

insomnia (Bährens conj. for hic omnia) = visions of the night. pergula, 'studio.'

BOOK XXVI.

I.

(The metres in this book, probably the earliest of the saturae, are mostly trochaic tetrameter catalectic. Lucilius writes for 'the general public,' not up to the level of the most cultivated, nor down to the requirements of the ignorant.)

[CIC. De Orat. 2. § 25 with Wilkins' note: PLIN. Praef. N. H. § 7.]

Pérsium non cúro legere, Laélium Decumúm volo.

[Ibid.]

The reading Manium of Pliny for Gaium is wrong; if, that is, Persium be right. C. Persius is spoken of by Cic., Brut. 26. 99, as 'litteratus homo.' The other names must represent the average citizen.

II.

(He plays with the Empedoclean doctrine (Lucret. I. 714 foll.) of the four elements, by making an absurd application of it.)

'Quaprópter certum est fácere contra ac pérsequi duo habét στοιχεῖα'—'at frúitur anima et córpore

γῇ córpus, anima est πνεῦμα'—'posterióribus στοιχείοις, si id malúerit, privabít tamen.'

[Nonius, s. v. deferre.]

A man is summoned for trial before the praetor Lupus. He won't turn up. Then Lupus will proceed, by 'interdictio,' to deprive him of two elements, fire and water. But he has the two other elements in his own body—earth and air. Well, the praetor will next deprive him of these; and that will complete the affair.

T. QUINCTIUS ATTA.

TOGATAE.

THE fragments of Atta are too scanty to enable us to judge of that skill in representing character—and especially female character—with which he is credited.

AEDILICIA.

AEDILICIA: sc. fabula. We may suppose that at an entertainment given by the Aediles a money-present is made to some popular actor (I); and that, later in the day, there is a little trouble between a noisy citizen and the police (II).

AQUAE CALDAE.

THE scene is laid in some popular watering-place, where the company is both gay and mixed. The respectable ladies complain that the courtesans are not obliged to wear their distinguishing dress, as in Rome (I). Then there seems to have been some quarrelling between the bathers and the manager of the baths about the water-supply. They complain that the water only comes trickling in; and he tells them if they are not content he shall close the spring altogether (II).

SATURA.

THE only fragment referred to this title has a curious history. Isidore of Seville (Origin. 6. 9) asserts that the Romans were forbidden to use, like the Greeks or Etrurians, an iron stylus for writing on their waxen tablets: 'ceram ferro ne caedito.' They were obliged to use a bone-point (I).

COMPITALIA.

THE Compitalia was a feast held in the winter in honour of the Lares, and was celebrated at the spots where cross-roads met. This play is interesting, because, in the Prologue, Afranius acknowledges, with unblushing frankness, that he took his plays not only from Menander, but from any author, Latin as well as Greek, who happened to serve his purpose (I). He expresses his marked preference for Terence (II, III).

DIVORTIUM.

Two sisters, very happily married, seem to have had their comfort disturbed by the stupid interference of their father, who tries to make a breach between them and their husbands (I); accusing one of the husbands of an intrigue, which he was keeping secret, in order that his wife might not be able to claim her dowry and leave him (II). The father seems to have been put up to this by the influence of a second wife, whom one of the sisters (or the accused husband) addresses in uncomplimentary language (III); reminding her how pleasant she seemed, when she first came into the family (IV). The meretrix, about whom all this disturbance arose, appears on the stage, and gives herself a high character (V).

EPISTULA.

A YOUNG man is found prowling about in the cold by his lady-love's house, and is asked to explain his business (I). He is dressed in a petticoat to look like a girl and so gain admission (II); in which he succeeds, though he is not used to such disguises (III). The mother comes on the scene, and asks the daughter to explain the intruder's presence; she states that he is taking refuge from a footpad (IV), and she defends her own modesty—she is not a girl who wants a host of lovers! (V). When the quarrel is over, the daughter tells the story to some friend—about her own suppressed laughter, and her mother's fury (VI), and their ultimate reconciliation (VII).

A YOUNG man has an intrigue with a Neapolitan girl, Moschis (I). His father meets him walking with her, dressed as a respectable lady; for which the son finds a sort of excuse (II). Rudely separated from Moschis, the young man attempts to drown himself, but he is rescued (exceptus) by a fishing-boat (III-V). How is Moschis to win him back again? She is advised to let him overhear her weeping for his supposed loss (VI-VIII).

FRATRIAE.

A NIGGARDLY father wishes to get his pretty daughter off his hands, without having to settle a dowry on her (I); and so he betroths her to a baker! (II). 'Why not to a pastry-cook?' cries the mother, 'and she might have kept the family in tarts' (III). The girl moves heaven and earth to get off the marriage (IV); and when her own lover brings her in, smartly dressed, to plead her case (V), she seems to have been successful, as we find her afterwards living in style (VI).

SIMULANS.

THE reclamation of a drunken and quarrelsome husband. After one stormy scene between the husband and wife, peace is restored through the pleading of their little child (I). The wife's father overhears the bickering with a secret joy (II), for he has taken the advice of a friend (III), and determined on a heroic remedy. Pretending (Simulans) extreme indignation, he announces his intention of dissolving this unhappy marriage. He bitterly reproaches the husband with his misconduct (IV). [These words were once the occasion of a political demonstration. The Simulans was acted in B.C. 57. The consul, Lentulus Spinther, who presided at the representation, was, in co-operation with the Optimates, working hard for Cicero's return from exile. It was so arranged that, when these words of reproach were uttered, the Chorus and actors, to a man, fixed their gaze on Clodius, and raised such a storm that he was glad to quit the theatre. Cic. Pro Sest. 55.] Now, all the money belonged to the wife, so when the dissolution of the marriage was announced, the husband had to turn out of doors amid the jeers of all the household (V). So he puts his pride in his pocket, and avails himself of the services of his amiable child, to make terms with his wife's father (VI).

VOPISCUS.

This is the technical term for the survivor of twin children, when one has died before its birth. In this case, the father, in his unreasonable anger, refuses to acknowledge the living child (I). He seems to have repudiated his wife, and afterwards to have repented; but as he has contracted a new marriage he is barred from return to his first love, as his new wife emphatically reminds him (II-IV). The rest of the fragments are of a very mixed character: a serious defence of the old practice of exposing children (V): honourable marriage commended to young men (VI): various characters introduced, such as the lady who gets power by capricious alternations of warmth and coolness (VII); the old woman on the look-out for a young lover (VIII); the lady's maid (IX); the trusty comrade (X); and the slaves who are spoiled by their masters (XI).

sic tacitus, stupidus, duplo ideo pereo [1].

Atque item alios versus eiusdem addidit, nec hercle minus dulces quam priores:

aut imber caelo candidus praecipitans:
at contra hunc ignem Veneris, nisi si Venus ipsa, nullast quae possit vis alia opprimere.'

[1] The reading of the last line is very uncertain. He seems to mean that his sufferings are twofold; first, his passion; secondly, his inability to express it. Bährens reads 'Sic tacitus, subidus dum studeo, pereo.'

Wordsworth quotes the original which suggested it, from Callimachus, Ep. 42 :—

LAEVIUS.

(Fl. circ. 90 A.C.?).

THE Erotopaegnia of Laevius, of which not less than six books were composed, may be supposed to have been love-songs and amatory scenes, suited to the freedom of drinking bouts. There are very scanty remains. The peculiarity of the poems of Laevius was the great variety of the metres in which he wrote, as though to test to the utmost the capabilities of the Latin language. The Alcestis, Ino, Protesilaodamia, Sirenocirca, &c., are specimens of these attempts. Laevius also borrowed from the Rhodian poets Simmias, Dosiades, and others, the foolish trick of attempting to represent the outlines of various things, such as an altar, a pan-pipe, an egg, by arranging lines of different length in such order that a stroke traced through the first and last letter of each would produce a particular shape. As Simmias had sketched out the 'Wing of Eros,' so Laevius in his 'Phoenix' has attempted by the graduation of his lines to suggest a wing.

ALCESTIS.

Corpore tenuato pectoreque undique obeso ac mente exsensa tardigeniclo senio obpressum.

[AUL. GELL. 19. 7.]

To this it may be well to add the remainder of the chapter in Gellius, who gives various examples of the bizarre language of Laevius: 'item notavimus quod oblitteram gentem pro "oblitterata" dixit; item quod hostes qui foedera frangerent foedifragos, non "foederifragos" dixit; item quod rubentem Auroram pudoricolorem appellavit, et Memnona nocticolorem; item quod forte, "dubitanter," et ab eo quod est "sileo" silenta loca dixit et pulverulenta et pestilenta, et quod carendum tui est pro "te," quodque magno impete pro "impetu"; item quod fortescere posuit pro "fortem fieri," quodque dolentiam pro "dolore," et avens pro "libens"; item curis intolerantibus pro "intolerandis," quodque manciolis, inquit, tenellis pro "manibus"; et quis tam siliceo? . . . Item fieri, inquit, inpendio infit, id est "fieri inpense incipit"; quodque accipitret posuit pro "laceret" . . . . Cetera, quae videbantur nimis poetica . . . praetermisimus; veluti fuit quod de Nestore ait trisaeclisenex et dulciorelocus: item quod de tumidis fluctibus inquit multigrumis, et flumina gelu concreta tegmine esse onychino dixit: et quae multiplicia ludens composuit; quale istud est quod vituperones suos subductisupercilii carptores appellavit.'

INO.

Et iam purpureo sŭras include cothurno, balteus et revocet volucres in pectore sĭnus, pressaque iam gravida crepitent tibi terga pharetra, derige odorisequos ad certa cubilia cănes.

[It will be noticed that the second and fourth hexameter ends in an iambus: this particular form of verse being called miurus (μείων . . οὐρά). The lines are quoted by Terent. Maurus, 1931, with the following introduction: 'Livius ille vetus Graio cognomine sŭae | inserit Inoni versus, puto, tale docĭmen: | praemisso heroo subiungit namque miuron, | hymnum quando chorus festo canit ore Trivĭae. | Et iam e. q. s.' There seems to be no doubt that Terent. Maur. is in error in ascribing the Ino to Livius rather than to Laevius, with whose style the language and versification agree. The scene probably represents the wild vision of the hunt which Athamas saw in his delirium, and in which he seemed to be taking part. See Ovid, Metam. 4. 512 foll.]

FABULAE ATELLANAE.

The old Oscan farce—fabula Atellana—took a new lease of life and a distinct literary development, in the hands of Pomponius of Bologna and Novius. There are titles preserved of 70 of the plays of Pomponius, and fragments amounting to 200 lines: of the plays of Novius 40 titles and 100 lines. But the remains are so scattered that it is impossible to sketch the entire plot of a single play. The original peculiarity of the Atellanes is preserved to a considerable extent in their new form: that is to say, the retention of certain stereotyped characters—Maccus, the prototype of the clown or harlequin of the pantomime—a compound of folly and shrewdness, who was, however, a favourite with the audience; Pappus, the old fool, like the pantaloon, always doing the wrong thing in the wrong way; Bucco, the glutton and swaggerer, like the ἀλάζων of the Attic comic stage; and Dossennus, the hunchback, a man of low cunning and endless resource. M. Patin, describing the resuscitation of the Atellane and the mime, speaks of them as 'ces antiques parades devenues le cadre d'une nouvelle fabula palliata, d'une nouvelle fabula togata, ou plutôt tabernaria. . . . La constitution de l'atellane changea avec le temps. Elle passa des amateurs aux comédiens, de l'improvisation à une rédaction préliminaire, de l'osque au latin, de la prose aux vers. . . . L'atellane ainsi renouvelée était particulièrement une sorte de fabula tabernaria, qui, sous les masques d'Atella, se moquait des basses classes de la société, surtout de la société extra muros, des ridicules de la campagne et de la petite ville [1].'

A few lines must suffice to suggest the subjects with which these farces dealt.

M. TERENTIUS VARRO.

(116–26 A.C.)

SATURAE MENIPPEAE.

ABORIGINES (περὶ ἀνθρώπων φύσεως).

THIS Satura seems to deal with the beginnings of the human race. It opens with a procession of animals, uttering their distinctive cries (I, II); so there is a contrast suggested between the brutes and Man, who is a being urged on by soaring hopes, which disappoint him in the moment of fruition (III). His best companion is Virtue, the only companion suitable alike to the greybeard and the boy—indeed, the old require it even more, for an ass, after a certain age, is no better than one too young (IV). Mankind, according to Varro, makes slow progress, like the growth of a child; and the first beginnings of artistic taste are seen in the desire to fashion and possess dolls and little images (V).

[NONIUS, s. v. pupa.]

ANDABATAE.

ANDABATAE (Cic. Fam. 7. 10) were gladiators who wore visored helmets without any aperture for the eyes; and so, to the amusement of the spectators, fought blindfold. There is probably an allusion in this title to the imprisonment of the soul in the bonds of flesh, and its subjection to the slavery of lusts (I, II, III). The tone is distinctly anti-materialistic—'man is anything rather than a mere lump of flesh' (IV): the soul is pent within him, like air in a bladder (V).

ΑΝΘΡΩΠΟΠΟΛΙΣ (περὶ γενεθλιακῆς).

The subject of this Satura seems, generally, to deal with the Family—its foundation, growth, and maintenance. Varro evidently protests against extravagance in the marriage-festivals and marriage settlements. To live up to this excessive rate the head of the family has to borrow, and the usurer takes his bond (scriptio) for double the amount actually lent (I); but the possession of wealth will not ensure peace of mind; not even those Mountains of the Persians, which were said (Plaut. Pers. 1. 1. 24) to be of solid gold (II). Dowries must be reckoned by so many kingdoms, rather than by so many pounds (III); and the god of Wedlock is a purge that washes out the purse (IV).

BIMARCUS.

This Satura turns on a special application of the language of philosophy to practical life. The Sceptics had summed up their objections against any objective certitude in ten points—as we may call them, 'turning-points,' τρόποι. Varro plays upon the ambiguity of this word; introducing himself in a double personality—one 'Marcus' representing the Roman of the past, the other of the present. The honest, old-fashioned 'Marcus,' like the heroes of ancient days (except πολύτροπος Ὀδυσσεύς), is innocent of any 'choppings and changings': the nearest approach to such a word that he can realise is τροπαῖα, 'the trophies raised after the rout (τροπή) of the foe' (I–III). A good 'turning-point' for the degenerate sons of Rome would be the descent of the crashing thunderbolt upon their orgies! (IV, V). No Hercules could cleanse such Augean stables! (VI).

I.

DOLIUM AUT SERIA.

THIS mysterious title is really quite unintelligible. As the tub in which Diogenes lived is called 'dolium' in Juv. Sat. 14. 308, it has been conjectured that we have here the excuse given by the philosopher for living in a roofless dwelling, because he had an uninterrupted view of all the glories of the midnight skies.

EUMENIDES.

IN this Satura the Stoics and Cynics seem to be played off against each other. A certain Cynic finds that it is his day for entertaining a party of philosophers, mainly of his own sect: the inscription Cave Canem, at the house where they meet, is sufficiently suggestive of the Cynics (I). At table a Stoic proposes the well-known thesis that all men are mad. This sweeping judgment is illustrated by various portraits from life, scenes from the poets, &c. There is Ajax slaughtering beasts in mistake for Ulysses, there is the hard-headed, half-brutalised man, the youth who drinks too much for the good of his health, the effeminate debauchee, the gourmand, the man of fashion, the miser—all these are clear cases of madness (II–VI). The Cynic extends this sentence to all philosophers, with their wild dreams (VII). Then the guests rise and walk about the town to inspect the various instances of madness they may encounter (VIII). They visit the temple of Serapis, and find that all the machinery of oracles, healing, &c. are so many ways of getting at the money of the credulous (IX, X). They move on to the temple of Cybele, and there they hear the sound of the Phrygian flutes, the clashing cymbals, and the song of the eunuch-priests (given in Galliambics) (XI–XIII). The Cynic cannot control his outspoken indignation; so he is pursued by the fanatical crowd, and has to take refuge at an altar (XIV). The guests, continuing their walk, mount an eminence, from which they see the people pursued by three Furies, the third of whom is Infamia—her foot planted on her victims' chest and her wild hair streaming in the wind (XV, XVI). The narrator of the story runs down and proffers aid, but he is badly received by the crowd, who scorn his help and proclaim him a madman (XVII). Brought before the bar of public opinion (Existimatio) he is registered on the list of the 'insani' (XVIII). But Truth, the pupil of the Attic Academy, saves him by remarking that 'to the jaundiced eye everything looks yellow' (XIX, XX).

ΓΕΡΟΝΤΟΔΙΔΑΣΚΑΛΟΣ.

Two persons may be supposed to be brought together in this Satura—a man of mature years, and a young representative of the luxury of modern Rome. The splendours and the progress of later years are contrasted with the coarseness of old-fashioned times. The elderly man laments the loss of reverence and chastity (I), and the simplicity of family life, and the thrift of the housewife (II); recommending the manly severity of the consul Curius towards the malingerer (III). With these memories the young Roman contrasts the grandeur of the new country-houses with their cellars and barns and wine-presses—laughing contemptuously at the rough, plain life of his ancestors (IV–VII).

ΚΟΣΜΟΤΟΡΥΝΗ (περὶ φθορᾶς κόσμου).

ANAXIMANDER, Heracleitus and Empedocles had already speculated on the destruction of the material universe, and the Stoics held that it would be consumed by fire. Others maintained that it would come to an end, not by a violent catastrophe but by a gradual wearing away. This seems to be the underlying idea in ΚΟΣΜΟΤΟΡΥΝΗ, if τορύνη is to be taken as a 'wimble' or 'drill', rather than a 'stirrer' or 'squeezer' (as tudicula). Death waits upon the first beginnings of life (I); and war is another fruitful cause of this destruction, whether we think of the soldier going on his campaign and returning in safety (II, III), or of the horrors of civil war (IV). It seems that Varro plays upon the word κόσμος, and extends its meaning to all manner of decorative things, which are liable to the corruption of 'moth and rust' (V).

MANIUS.

I MAY venture here to reproduce the sketch given of this Satura in Mommsen's Roman History, B. v. Chap. xii: 'The Satire of "Manius" (Early Up!) describes the management of a rural household. Manius summons his people to rise with the sun, and in person conducts them to the scene of their labours (I). The youths make their own bed, which labour renders soft to them, and supply themselves with waterpot and lamp (II). Their drink is the clear fresh spring, their fare bread, and onions as a relish (III). Everything prospers in house and field. The house is no work of art, but an architect might learn symmetry from it (IV). Care is taken of the field, that it shall not be left disorderly and waste, or go to ruin through slovenliness and neglect (V); in return, the grateful Ceres wards off damage from the produce, that the high-piled sheaves may gladden the heart of the husbandman (VI). Here hospitality still holds good; everyone who has but imbibed his mother's milk is welcome (VII). The bread-pantry, and wine-vat, and the store of sausages on the rafters, lock and key are at the service of the traveller, and piles of food are set before him (VIII); contented sits the sated guest, looking neither before nor behind, dozing by the hearth in the kitchen (IX). The warmest double-wool sheepskin is spread as a couch for him (X). Here people still, as good burghers, obey the righteous law, which neither out of envy injures the innocent, nor out of favour pardons the guilty. Here they speak no evil against their neighbours (XI). Here they trespass not with their feet on the sacred hearth, but honour the gods with devotion and sacrifices, throw to the familiar spirit his little bit of flesh into the appointed little dish (XII), and when the master of the household dies accompany the bier with the same prayer with which those of his father and of his grandfather were borne forth' (XIII).

MARCIPOR.

MARCIPOR, i. e. Marci puer, or Varro's own slave. It is difficult to decide whether the master is moralising to the slave, or the slave (as in Hor. Sat. 2. 7) lecturing the master. The general subject of the Satura is the vanity and extravagance of human wishes, exemplified in children and in men and women, who are as silly as children (I–III). The verses about the storm have been taken to refer to the dangers incurred by merchants in search of gain, and have been compared with the picture of the shipwrecked adventurer in Juvenal (Sat. 14. 290 foll.). But this is hardly compatible with the description of the soaring storks, blasted by lightning, and tumbling to the ground. It may therefore be better to see in this scene a reminiscence of the flight of Menippus, on a voyage of investigation, to the court of Zeus, as given by Lucian in the Icaromenippus, though the fate of the philosopher there was not so disastrous.

MARCOPOLIS (περὶ ἀρχῆς).

IT is impossible to say whether the title of this Satura suggests a real and practicable commonwealth, such as Marcus (Varro) would wish it to be; or whether it is only an aspiration—a Νεφελοκοκκυγία after his own heart, as Mommsen calls it.—Anyhow, the point seems to lie in an elaborate analogy between the various arrangements of a properly organised city and the general economy of the human body (I). Though in the beginning of human society there may be a general equality, it is not long before the principle of the 'survival of the fittest' asserts itself (II, III).

MODIUS.

THIS word, which properly means a dry measure of capacity, is used as the title of the Satura because it suggests a constant play on the words 'modus,' 'modicus,' 'modeste,' 'medioxime,' and the like. Varro apologises for the 'theatrical measure' of his treatise: which, however, need not be touched by his friend, and the writing can easily be sponged out (I, II). It is better to keep to a moderate amount of meat and drink (III); unlike the custom of those whose measure of living is high living (IV). This 'moderation' is the secret of life, and it is the text of the famous Delphic inscription (V, VI).

ΤΟΝΟΣ ΛΥΡΑΣ.

The proverb in full runs thus: ὄνος λύρας ἀκούων κινεῖ τὰ ὦτα, and the expression ὄνος λύρας is used for a stupid man, who has no appreciation of music. The Cynics generally looked down upon music, and Diogenes had a sneer for those who could tune a lyre, but were indifferent as to their soul being in a state of harmony. The Satura describes a contention between a devotee of music and one of its detractors. It may remind us of the way in which Zethus (in the Antiope of Euripides and Pacuvius) presses the claims of a practical life against his dreamy, music-loving brother Amphion. The prologue opens with Phonascus (a professor) announcing himself and his accomplishments (I): music is natural to man (II): it is the harmony of the spheres which regulates the universe (III): workers sing over their daily toil (IV): the vast audience in a theatre is melted by the tender notes of the flute, or excited by more stirring tones (V): the priests of Cybele can tame the lion with the sound of their cymbals, as the statue on Mt. Ida commemorates (VI): how much nobler is such a profession than the coarse amusements of the huntsman! (VII). To which the unmusical man replies, that after all it is an unprofitable art (VIII); and that we must admit as great a variety in the accomplishments of men, as we see in the colours of horses (IX).

PAPIAPAPAE (περὶ ἐγκωμίων).

The title seems to be only an exclamation expressive of wondering admiration. The Satura is directed against excessive praise, which is often given out of mere ignorance, as a man may mistake a 'bit of glass for an emerald' (I). Funeral orations are fulsome; they do not discriminate between the worthy and unworthy (II). The mincing compliments paid to a pretty woman are absurd in their extravagance (III–VII). But there is another side to the picture—excessive dispraise. Some critics know how to pick holes in everything, but do not know how to give honour where honour is due (VIII, IX).

PROMETHEUS LIBER.

ANTISTHENES, the Cynic philosopher, had already written a dialogue between Prometheus and Hercules, in which Hercules reproaches Prometheus for his ill-advised gift of fire to mortals, which is interpreted to mean the fatal tendency to philosophic speculations.

This suggests that the interlocutors in this Satura may be Prometheus and Hercules. In the first part of it, Prometheus bewails his terrible tortures (I–V): in the second, Hercules taunts him with the deterioration of the human beings which he has animated; exhibiting the extravagant licentiousness of the young profligate with his dainty mistress, and the coarse, swinish life of the common citizen (VI, VII).

QUINQUATRUS.

THIS festival of Minerva gives Varro an opportunity of dealing with those professions under the especial patronage of the goddess, and particularly that of the physician. 'Why,' asks one 'should I employ a doctor, and have to drink nauseous physic and reduce my strength?' (I). In preference to this, he writes (in true medical style) a prescription for a good dose of wine, with no addition but pure water (II, III). The doctor who draws the fluid from a dropsical patient is not as clever as an Etruscan inspector of conduits! (IV).

SEXAGESSIS.

This word, which commonly means a sum of sixty asses, is here grotesquely used for 'a man of sixty years.' He is the Roman Rip van Winkle, who falls asleep at the age of ten and does not wake for half-a-century (I, II). Then he looks around and finds everything changed; himself not least, for he has a bristly beard like a hedgehog, and a great snout for a nose (III). 'So a pup changes to a dog, or a grain of corn to an ear' (IV). The ancient virtues have been banished from Rome, and their place is supplied by Impiety, Disloyalty and Impudence (V). No 'pious Aeneas' would 'carry' his father now-a-days; but every brat is ready to 'carry him off' by poison (VI). There is a regular sale of votes in the Comitia (VII); the judges make money out of the accused (VIII); there is only one law observed—'Give and take' (IX). Marcus deplores this detestable change, recalling the days of sobriety and steadiness (X); when men were not ready to rush into the decoy, like so many silly ducks (XI). The young Romans resent this protest, and proceed to illustrate in his person the proverb—'sexagenarios de ponte': which properly means that men of this age were barred from the voting-lobby (pons); but the joke lies in the other interpretation of the phrase, referring to the actual casting of old men from one of the bridges over the Tiber, as a relic of human sacrifice. See s. v. depontani senes (XII–XIV).

[I have followed Bährens in grouping all these epigrams under Varro's name, as, at least, convenient; but the authorship of several is uncertain.]

M. T. CICERO.

(106–43 A.C.)

For a brief period the dictum of Plutarch (Vit. Cic. c. 2) was really true—that Cicero was the first poet as well as the first orator of his time. It was only true till Lucretius and Catullus came into the field. In spite of the abuse and ridicule[1] which was heaped upon the poetical compositions of Cicero for excessive vanity and expressions in questionable taste, the fact remains that the fruits of Cicero's leisure hours mark a distinct advance in Latin poetry, and a real development of the hexameter, which made the perfect Virgilian rhythm distinctly more possible.

His Marius is a tribute from one citizen of Arpinum to another. Cicero was still young when he wrote it: and there is something in the boldness of the man who could choose such a subject under the dictatorship of Sulla that may remind us of his famous defence of Roscius of Ameria. But the date of the poem is very doubtful.

The scene is laid at Arpinum. We see Marius beneath the famous oak (Arpinatium, Mariana quercus, Cic. De Legg. I. 1), encouraged by a favourable omen:—

MARIUS.

I.

Hic Iovis altisoni subito pinnata satelles arboris e trunco serpentis saucia morsu subrigit, ipsa feris transfigens unguibus, anguem abicit efflantem et laceratum adfligit in unda, seque obitu a solis nitidos convertit ad ortus.

conspexit Marius, divini numinis augur, faustaque signa suae laudis reditusque notavit, partibus intonuit caeli pater ipse sinistris:
sic aquilae clarum firmavit Iuppiter omen.

[Cic. De Div. 1. 48. Cp. Hom. Il. 12. 200; Verg. Aen. 11. 751.]

LIMON.

Λειμών i. e. the Meadow; (ἐστὶ δὲ ποικίλων περιοχή, a sort of album of different 'cullings.')

[Sueton. Vit. Terent.]

DE CONSULATU SUO.

[For nearly twenty-six years Cicero's muse was silent. But after his return from exile he resumed his poetical studies; partly as an alleviation of his own anxiety, and partly as a means of keeping up in the minds of his countrymen the memory of his splendid services, on which he set so much store. The De Consulatu suo was the work of his forty-seventh year; the De Temporibus suis of his fiftieth.

The De Consulatu consisted of three books, of which the second was connected with the name of the Muse Urania; the third with Calliope. The first book is only known to us from a note of Servius on Verg. Ecl. 8. 106, which tells us the story of Terentia's sacrifice: how that when the fire had died down and she was about to pour in the libation, the flame shot up again from the ashes, thus foretelling that Cicero would be made Consul that very year.]

The two verses may be filled up as follows :—

I.

Aspice : corripuit tremulis altaria flammis sponte sua, dum ferre moror, cinis ipse. Bonum sit !
[SERVIUS, l. c.]

II.

(Urania addresses Cicero.)

DECIMUS LABERIUS.

(Circ. 105-43 A.C.)

MIMUS.

THE Mime, which originally came to Rome from Magna Graecia, was at first only a 'ballet divertissement,' without song or dialogue. It received a new impulse in the time of Sulla; and under Julius Caesar it reached its zenith of literary perfection at the hands of Decimus Laberius, a Roman knight. The titles of forty-four of his Mimes are preserved. The distinguishing peculiarity of the Mime was the disuse of masks, and the performance of female parts by women. The stock characters of the Atellane do not appear in the Mime; otherwise, the plots were not dissimilar. But the Mime had its own set of regular characters—the stupid husband; the faithless wife; the confidential slave; the soubrette, in her short mantle (ricinium), which gave the alternative title of fabula riciniata to the Mime.

[For a general idea of the quality of these plays we may refer to Ovid[1]:

Quid si scripsissem mimos obscena iocantes,
qui semper vetiti crimen amoris habent;
in quibus assidue cultus procedit adulter, verbaque dat stulto callida nupta viro?
nubilis hos virgo matronaque virque puerque spectat, et e magna parte senatus adest.
nec satis incestis temerari vocibus aures;
assuescant oculi multa pudenda pati;
cumque fefellit amans aliqua novitate maritum,
plauditur, et magno palma favore datur.]

The remains of the named plays of Laberius are very slight.

VIII.

The story about Caesar, Laberius, and his rival Publilius Syrus, is thus given by Macrobius (Sat. 2. 7): 'Laberium asperae libertatis equitem Romanum Caesar quingentis milibus invitavit ut prodiret in scaenam et ipse ageret mimos quos scriptitabat. Sed potestas non solum si invitet, sed etiam si supplicet, cogit: unde se et Laberius a Caesare coactum in prologo testatur his versibus:

Necéssitas, cuius cúrsus transversi ímpetum voluérunt multi effúgere, pauci pótuerunt, quo mé detrusit paéne extremis sénsibus!
quem núlla ambitio, núlla umquam largítio, nullús timor, vis núlla, nulla auctóritas movére potuit ín iuventa dé statu:
ecce ín senecta ut fácile labefecít loco viri éxcellentis ménte clemente édita summíssa placide blándiloquens orátio!
etenim ípsi di negáre cui nil pótuerunt hominém me denegáre quis possét pati?
ego bís tricenis ánnis actis síne nota equés Romanus é Lare egressús meo domúm revertar mímus. nimirum hóc die unó plus vixi míhi quam vivendúm fuit.
Fortúna, inmoderata ín bono aeque atque ín malo,
si tíbi erat libitum lítterarum laúdibus floréns cacumen nóstrae famae frángere, cur cúm vigebam mémbris praeviridántibus, satisfácere populo et táli cum poterám viro,
non mé flexibilem cóncurvasti ut cárperes?
nuncíne me deicis? quó? quid ad scaenam ádfero?
decórem formae an dígnitatem córporis,
animí virtutem an vócis iucundaé sonum?
ut hédera serpens víres arboreás necat
ita mé vetustas ámplexu annorum énecat:
sepúlchri similis níl nisi nomen rétineo.

In ipsa quoque actione subinde se qua poterat ulciscebatur, inducto habitu Syri, qui velut flagris caesus praeripientique se similis exclamabat:

Porró, Quirites, líbertatem pérdimus.

Et paulo post adiecit :

Nécesse est multos tímeat quem multí timent.

Quo dicto universitas populi ad solum Caesarem oculos et ora convertit, notantes inpotentiam eius hac dicacitate lapidatam. Ob haec in Publilium vertit favorem.'

Laberius was adjudged by Caesar to have been unsuccessful : as the dictator himself phrased it, 'favente tibi me victus es, Laberi, a Syro.' He then gave the prize to Publilius Syrus, and to Laberius a sum of five hundred sestertia, with a golden ring ; thus restoring to him the equestrian rank, which he had lost by appearing on the stage. Laberius, though crushed in spirit, took his defeat very well ; and, as Macrobius (l. c.) goes on to say, 'sequenti statim commissione mimo novo interiecit hos versus :

'Non póssunt primi esse ómnes omni in témpore.
summum ád gradum cum cláritatis véneris consístes aegre, níctu citius décidas.
cecidi égo, cadet quí séquitur : laus est pública.'

LUDICRA.

P. VALERIUS CATO, a native of Cisalpine Gaul, had been robbed of his patrimony at the time of the Sullan proscriptions, and it is possible that the Lydia or Dirae (which has been doubtfully ascribed to him) deals with this grievance. Bibaculus in these fragments alludes to Cato's grammatical and poetical studies (I); to his debts, which all his cleverness could not 'clear up,' and which forced him to sell his villa at Tusculum (II); and to his poverty-stricken old age in a miserable hut (III).

[SUETON. l. c.]

[1] legit, perhaps 'reads aloud,' and so make a reputation for them.

[2] solvere. The point of the epigram turns on the double meaning of 'solvere' = 'pay,' or 'solve'; as applied to a 'debt' or a 'difficulty': and similarly of 'nomen expedire,' meaning 'to elucidate an expression' or 'to clear off a debt.'

PUBLILIUS SYRUS.

(Fl. 50 A.C.)

MIMUS.

A specimen of an unnamed passage from Publilius Syrus is given in Petronius (55):

Luxúriae rictu Mártis marcent moénia.
tuó palato claúsus pavo páscitur plumáto amictus aúreo Babylónico, gallína tibi Numídica, tibi gallús spado:
cicónia etiam, gráta, peregrina hóspita pietáticultrix grácilipes crotalístria avis, éxul hiemis, titulus tepidi témporis, nequítiae nidum in cáccabo fecít modo.
quo márgarita cára tibi, bacam Índicam, smarágdum ad quam rem víridem, pretiosúm vitrum, quo Cárchedonios óptas ignes lápideos, nisi út scintilles? próbitas est carbúnculus.
an út matrona ornáta phaleris pélagiis tollát pedes indómita in strato extráneo?
aequum ést induere núptam ventum téxtilem, palám prostare núdam in nebula línea?

In spite of the licentious character of the Mimes, and the unrestrained merriment which marked them, there was always an undercurrent of something better; which showed itself in those shrewd maxims of worldly wisdom and even of high morality, which the industry of later ages has culled from the Mimes. The principal collection goes by the name of PUBLILII SYRI SENTENTIAE; of which the following lines are typical specimens.

SENTENTIAE.

I. Ab álio expectes álteri quod féceris.
II. Aliénum aes homini ingénuo acerba est sérvitus.
III. Amáre et sapere víx deo concéditur.

PROPEMPTICON POLLIONIS.

THIS seems to have been a guide-book in the form of a poem, to describe for the young Asinius Pollio the outline of a journey he was about to take from Brundisium, via Corcyra, to Actium, and so along the coasts of Greece into the interior of that country. It was probably modelled on the Propempticon of the Bithynian Parthenios.

III.

The difference between Caesar and Brutus.

Brútus, quia regés eiecit, cónsul primus fáctus est:
híc, quia consulés eiecit, réx postremo fáctus est.

[SUETON. ib.]

IV.

Cp. Vell. Paterc. 2. 67: 'Lepidus Paulus fratrem proscripserat; nec Planco gratia defuit ad inpetrandum ut frater eius Plancus Plotius proscriberetur; eoque inter iocos militaris qui currum Lepidi Plancique secuti erant . . . usurpabant hunc versum:

Dé germanis nón de Gallis dúo triumphant cónsules.'

V.

Ventidius Bassus, who had once made his living by looking after mules, was elected consul, and these lines were sung about the city :

Concúrrite omnes aúgures, haruspices porténtum inusitátum conflatum ést recens;
nam múlos qui fricábat consul fáctus est.

[Aul. Gell. 15. 4.]

Note on I.—Munro (Crit. and Elucid. of Catullus, pp. 76–79) reminds us that the occasion of a Triumph, when a man seemed to stand on the highest pinnacle of glory, was just the moment when jealous Fortune must be appeased, and the effect of the Evil Eye averted. 'The greater the General was, and the more adored by his soldiers, the greater would be the sacrifice demanded by Fortuna, and the more ribald the fun in honour of their much-loved General. Caesar has grievously suffered for this. . . . In the days of Suetonius and Dio Cassius people had forgotten that in Julius' time the abuse meant little or nothing; and these two writers have taken literally what soldiers said in boisterous good humour.'

C. LICINIUS MACER CALVUS.

(82–47 A.C.)

THE friend (and, sometimes, the butt) of Catullus. A man perhaps more eminent as a barrister than as a poet.

EPITHALAMIA.

Et leges sanctas docuit et cara iugavit corpora conubiis et magnas condidit urbes.

[SERV. ad Verg. Aen. 4. 58, de Cerere.]

IO.

I.

A virgo infelix, herbis pasceris amaris!

[SERV. ad Verg. Ecl. 6. 47.]

II.

Mens mea dira sibi praedicens omina vecors.

[PROBUS, 234 K. s. v. sibī.]

III.

Cum gravis ingenti conivere pupula somno . . .

[PRISCIAN, 1. 479 K. s. v. conivĕre.]

IV.

Frigida iam celeri superata est Bistonis ora.

[PROBUS, 226 K.]

V.

Sol quoque perpetuos meminit requiescere cursus.

[SERV. ad Verg. Ecl. 8. 4.]

LUDICRA.

I.

(Alluding to Q. Curius, a notorious gambler.)

Et talis Curius pereruditus.

[ASCON. 84 K.]

II.

(Hermogenes Tigellius offered for sale as a Sardinian slave.)

Sardi Tigelli putidum venit caput.

L. VARIUS RUFUS.

(74–14 A.C.).

DE MORTE.

(THIS Epic by Varius, the friend of Virgil, is commonly supposed to refer to the violent death of Caesar.)

I.

Vendidit hic Latium populis agrosque Quiritum eripuit: fixit leges pretio atque refixit.

[MACROB. Sat. 6. 1. 39; see VERG. Aen. 6. 621.]

II.

Incubet ut Tyriis atque ex solido bibat auro.

[MACROB. Sat. 6. 1. 40.]

III.

Quem non ille sinit lentae moderator habenae qua velit ire, sed angusto prius orbe coercens insultare docet campis fingitque morando.

[MACROB. Sat. 6. 2. 19.]

IV.

Ceu canis umbrosam lustrans Gortynia vallem,
si veteris potuit cervae deprendere lustra, saevit in absentem et circum vestigia lustrans aethera per nitidum tenues sectatur odores;
non amnes illam medii, non ardua tardant, perdita nec serae meminit decedere nocti.

[MACROB. Sat. 6. 2. 20; see VERG. Ecl. 8. 88.]

M. TULLIUS LAUREA.

(Fl. 40 A.C.)

EPIGRAMMA.

SEE Pliny, N. H. 31. § 7 : 'huius (Academiae, Villae Ciceronianae) in parte prima exiguo post obitum ipsius (Ciceronis), Antistio Vetere possidente, eruperunt fontes calidi perquam salubres oculis, celebrati carmine Laureae Tullii, qui fuit e libertis eius' :

Quo tua, Romanae vindex clarissime linguae,
silva loco melius surgere iussa viret, atque Academiae celebratam nomine villam nunc reparat cultu sub potiore Vetus :
hoc en iam apparent lymphae non ante repertae, languida quae infuso lumina rore levant.
nimirum locus ipse sui Ciceronis honori hoc dedit, hac fontes cum patefecit ope, ut, quoniam totum legitur sine fine per orbem
sint plures oculis quae medeantur aquae.
